PREFACE

The Parsons family in England was one of great antiquity and merit long before their splendid exploits brought the grant of arms and title to Sir Richard Parsons, Earl of Rosse.

The Leopard Faced Arms and Halbert Headed Crest of Parsons are not unknown to history for they stand for splendid honor and true aristocracy.

In early Colonial days two Parsons brothers came to America from England, one settled in Massachusetts near Boston, and the other in Virginia. The name of Thomas, William, James and John Parsons appear in the history of the first settlers of Jamestown, Virginia, 1621, also in the War Records of 1776. As traced down in history I find Thomas Parsons and sons were among the first settlers of Hampshire County, Virginia in 1700. The dates of births marriages and deaths cannot be given for all of the Churches and County Records were destroyed during the Civil War.

It has been an arduous task piecing the fragments of data together gathered from various records. I have written over six hundred letters to those connected with the Parsons family. Some have been prompt to reply and give the desired information while others were not interested in their ancestors and did not seem to wish their names enrolled with one of America's most prolific families.

I have tried to avoid errors, and any that may be found in this book are not within the knowledge of the Author. Many of my biographical sketches are written from memory. Had I personally known these people perhaps I could have interwoven the stories differently and made them more interesting to my readers. As it is they may lack completeness, but I hope a more competent author may take up any broken threads and carry the good work forward, for there will not be any less material to work upon as there seems to be no danger of Race Suicide in the Parsons family, judging from the names now recorded. The Parsons are and have always been a public spirited race and I am one who can speak with great pride of my ancestors and with great love for the dear old state where so many generations of the Parsons Family have been bred and born.

In my beloved southland the sunbeams shine the brightest

The honeysuckle and laurels kiss the dew,
While among them the birds sing sweetly,
And the gloomy days are few.

Oft amid the glorious woods I've wandered,
Amid the shadows dark and deep;
Of waving pine and oak tree.
Where their silent vigil keep.

Virginia thou rich and rarest of all the states.

In my fancies brightest page,
Virginia, the best and fairest,
The Home of Presidents, Seer and Sage.

AS A MARK OF ESTEEM FOR NOBILITY OF CHARACTER IN THE TRODDEN PATHS OF
LIFE AND FOR THE COURAGE
THAT MADE THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF WESTERN VIRGINIA POSSIBLE,

THE AUTHOR

PARSONS'

Family History and Record

(By William Henry Parsons, of San Bernardino, Cal.)

In England, in the year 1400, lived one John Parr who had twelve sons born to him, and as these sons grew to manhood, they became known as Parr's sons. This name spelled Parrssons, until the begining of the last century when some of the middle letters were dropped, leaving the name as it is today.

Among the notable of our early ancestors were Catherine Parr prominent in English history, also one John Parsons who served two terms as Lord Mayor of London.

In early Colonial days in this country, two brothers by the name of Parsons, and descendants of the original John Parr, came to America, one settling in Virginia and the other in New England near Boston. We trace my branch of the family to the New England brother; a town near there is named Parsonsville.

Now, I have our old family Bible before me and I can give you the rest of the story accurately:

The Rev. Jamqes Parsons, my grand-father, was born in New York state, June 20th, 1791, and died May 1st, 1854. He married Anna Briggs, August 20th, 1821 and of this union were born four sons and four daughters. The youngest son, my father, Thomas M. Parsons, was born November 15, 1834. Thomas M. Parsons married Lydia Ann Antrim, September 1, 1859. To this union were born two sons and three daughters, the eldest daughter, Mrs. Alice Ellen Parsons Barrows and myself, William Henry Parsons, being the only ones living. I was born December 26, 1889, and married Mildred May Bishop, December 25, 1889. Our only child, Alfred Bishop Parsons, was born March 15, 1902.

The Rev. James Parsons lived and raised his family in New York and Pennsylvania. Elmira, New York and Canton, Pennsylvania, being the scenes of my father's childhood. At the age of 24 he moved to Lacon, Illinois, where he met and married my mother. From there, about the time the Civil War began, he moved to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where I first saw the light of day.

From there he moved to this place in 1874, where we have lived ever since. My father died May 28, 1897, and my mother in 1894.

As far as I know none of my branch of the family have done great deeds or become very wealthy, but they have all lived in comfort with a fairly moderate amount of this world's goods, and have, without exception, been upright and respected in the community in which they lived.

My father, Thomas M. Parsons, early in life took the profession of Civil Engineering. He served the City of Cedar Rapids one term as city engineer, and filled the same office one term in this place; also served two terms of four years each as County Surveyor of this County, and at the time of his death was U. S. Dept. Mineral Surveyor for the State of California.

I am doing a general contracting business in painting and decorating. My residence is 666—Sixth St., San Bernardino, Cal.

ANCESTRAL REGISTRY.

(Compiled by Sylvester G. Parsons, Jr., April 30, 1859.)

The first one of my ancestors of whom I can find an authentic account is:

"Benjamin Parsons," who came from England in 1635, and settled at Springfield, Mass. Of his children I have been able to learn but little. His grandson

"Ebenezer Parsons," was deacon of the church at Springfield, and had a numerous family, of whom I can name five sons: Jonathan, Moses, Solomon, David and Nathan.

"Jonathan" was born at West Springfield, Mass., November 30, 1705. Graduated at Yale College, 1729; settled in the ministry at Newburyport, Mass., and died July 19, 1776. He was a man of pre-eminent talent and a very celebrated preacher of the "New Light," or "Revival Class." He was a warm personal friend of Whitefield, at whose house Whitefield died in 1770. He had thirteen children, one of whom

"Samuel Holden Parsons," who was born in 1737; graduated at Harvard College, 1756; settled as a lawyer at Middleton, Conn.; became a Major-General in the Revolution, and was afterwards appointed by Washington, Governor of the North West Territory, and was drowned in the Ohio river near Pittsburg.

"Moses Parsons" was born June 20, 1716; graduated at Harvard, 1736; settled at Byfield, Mass. Was a distinguished minister and died December 14, 1783. One of his sons was the celebrated Chief Justice.

"Theophilus Parsons, L.L.D.," who graduated at Harvard, 1769; settled at Newburyport, Mass., as a lawyer; removed to Boston in 1800, and died 1813. He was a giant in intellect and legal learning, and cousin to my grandfather. His children and descendants belong to the Massachusetts and Boston Aristocracy. His son

"Theophilus," is now at the head of the law department of Harvard, and author of "Parsons on Contracts," and other law books of great excellence. The late "Simon Greenleaf," author of a leading work on Evidence, sprung from "Moses Parsons," on his mother's side.

"David Parsons" settled in the ministry at Amherse, Mass., and was a popular preacher for forty years, when his son "David" was settled as Colleague with him, and continued in the ministry there over forty years, and died in 1823. One of his daughters married the Rev. Mr. Washburn, his successor; another, Mr. Williams of Salem. A son, Henry, resides now at New Orleans.

"Nathan Parsons" (my father's grandfather) settled in Belcher town as a land holder, and died about 1807 or 1808. He was a very tall and straight man, with black hair; wore a three cornered cocked hat; knee breeches; long stockings and silver buckles, and walked with a long cane. His sons were: Medad, Eldad, Nathan and Oliver, my grandfather.

"Medad" went early to Oswego; afterwards settled in Canada between Hamilton and Toronto. He left a numerous progeny, one of whom is still living there, and is a distinguished agriculturist.

"Eldad" settled in Belchertown, Mass., as a land holder and merchant, and died about 1825, having been Legislator and Magistrate many years. His son "Gould" (from whom I take my middle name) has been a merchant all his days. Is now living at Troy, N. Y., aged 76 years, and has a daughter who is a missionary in India. "Hazo," another son, married and settled in Western Virginia; afterwards moved to Illinois, where his descendants are numerous. "Rock," another son, settled in Huntsville, Ala., as physician. He died early, leaving a widow and one son.

"Nathan" settled in Bangor, Me. He was an Adjutant General in the Revolution and a man of distinction. He visited my grandfather "Oliver" in a coach and six, and was very liberal in the bestowal of gifts. His widow is now living at Bangor, aged 92, and draws her husband's pension of $20 per month. He had three wives, and his descendants are scattered all over the country. One of them, "Budd Parsons" has been a sea captain for more than 50 years.

"Oliver Parsons," my grandfather, was born March 14, 1767. He settled as a land holder in Granby, Mass., and died in 1805, from an accidental injury received while passing some men who were blasting rocks. He married a daughter of Jesse Lanphear, who was a tall man with sandy hair, and a devoted Methodist, and who had four wives, and left children enough to settle a continent. One of them, Dr. Abel Lanphear, died at Cincinnati. Another, Benjamin Lanphear, went to Lexington, Kentucky, and there leaving a widow and about a dozen children. My grandmother (Phoebe Lanphear) had light hair, and was a smart resolute woman.

My Grandfather, "Oliver Parsons," left three sons: Oliver, now living at Milwaukee, Wis.; Horatio Adams, now living near Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Sylvester Gould, my father, who resides at Kaufman, Texas.

"Oliver Parsons" was born at Granby, Mass., July 29, 1795. Died at Milwaukee, Wis., December 6, 1864. Married at Lewiston, Niagara County, N. Y., November 3, 1819, to Martha Childs, and has five children; Wm. Gould, merchant at Racine, Wis., Julia A., Edwin B., Oliver Morris and Mary Emma Parsons.

"Horatio A. Parsons was born at _____ and married twice. His first wife was Harriet Shepard, by whom he had two children; Horatio Douglass, now living in Wisconsin and Gertrude Layton, in Texas. His second wife was Miss Hammond, born in England, by whom he had five children, viz: Francis William; Ethelbert; Rock; Kirk and Arthur.

"Sylvester Gould Parsons." was born at Northampton, Mass., October 9, 1799. Came south when about seventeen years old, and married Mary Hill, September 2nd, in the Parish of St. Helena, La. He is thick set about five feet and eight inches high; has fair skin; olive eyes; and hair inclining to sandy. He has been merchant, Probate judge, physician and planter; is a shrewd business man, but possessed of too much benevolence and liberality to accumulate property rapidly. He is a R. A. Mason and member of the Presbyterian church. In politics has generally voted with the Whig party. He had twelve children, viz: Oliver James, Sylvester Gould, Louisa Matilda, Mary Ann, Horation Adams, David Hill, Nathaniel C., Rachel Melinda, William Gaston, John Dorrance, Harriet Shepherd, and Sarah Catharine.

"Oliver J." was born in the Parish of St. Landry, La., April 5th, 1821, educated at Georgetown College, Ky. Was a minister in the Baptist Church, and died of consumption on the Anite river, about 14 miles from Baton Rouge, La., in May 1846.

"Sylvester Gould" was born at Baton Rouge, La., December 16th, 1822, was educated at Cumberland College, Ky., studied law in the office of Alfred Hennen, Esq., at New Orleans, and admitted to the Bar on the 17th of March, 1845. Removed to Bastrop, La., same year, where he still resides, practicing law and planting. Was married on the 16th of February, 1854, to Miss Mary Whitstone (born and raised near Montgomery, Ala., and second daughter of Dr. John A. Whitstone).

"Louisa Matilda," born at Baton Rouge, November 19, 1824. Educated at Pine Grove Seminary, St. Tammany Parish, La. Now the wife of John Marshall Kinchen, has a houseful of children and resides at Warsaw Prairie, Texas.

"Mary Ann," also born at Baton Rouge, October 3, 1826, and now the wife of Joseph Ethan Allen, of Texas.

"Horation Adams," was born at Springfield, La., May 31, 1829, and graduated in the Medical Department of the University of La. in 1856. Was accidentally killed same year, at the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans.

"David Hill," born at Springfield, La., January 25, 1831. Is a planter, now residing on the Bois D'Ac, or East Fork of the Trinity River, Texas.

"Nathaniel C.," born also at Springfield, La., January 25, 1833, and now a planter residing near Bastrop, La.

"Rachel Melinda," died in childhood.

"William Gaston," born at the "Parsons' Place,, near Springfield, La., July 17, 1837. Now a distinguished preacher of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in Texas.

"John Dorrance," born at the same place, November 6, 1839; now a student of medicine at New Orleans.

"Harriet Shepard," born October 19, 1841. Married J. Monroe Noble, and resides at Kemp, Texas.

"Sarah Catherine," born at Arcadia, La., December 3, 1844. Educated at Kaufman Seminary, Texas, and quite an adapt in music.

You will perceive that the foregoing compilation was made in 1859. The information and biographical notices were obtained principally from "Uncle Horatio," and I have no doubt are substantially correct. These I have condensed. According to Uncle Horatio's estimate in 1859, there were in the United States and Canada, about 74,000 descendants of Benjamin Parsons, male and female. Within the last fifty years several new families of the name of "Parsons," have come over here from England, but I have not been able to trace their genealogy. One of them from Missouri, figured in the late war as a Major General, and was killed subsequently, I believe in Mexico. Another held the position of Governor of Alabama, after the close of the war, and is a lawyer of some note.

"William Henry Parsons" late of Waco, Texas, descended from Nathan Parsons, of Bangor, Me. He was a Brigadier-General in the Confederate Army, and a very gallant officer. He visited me several times during the war. After its close, he ventilated his patriotism in Brazil and other foreign countries, and finally located in the City of New York as a merchant.

July 28, 1868.

Sylvester G. Parsons.

THE JACKSON COUNTY BRANCH—FROM WASHINGTON TO TAFT.

(By Dr. T. I. C. Parsons.)

Tradition says that William Parsons, who left Prussia on account of religious persecution, first came to the Netherlands, and later to the eastern shore of Maryland, about the year 1725, where he afterwards married and reared two sons, Charles and Thomas, the first mentioned being the one from whom our family is descended, and was born in the year 1729. The brothers became separated and Charles came to Buchannon Fort.

Charles married twice. His first wife was a Miss Chesunt, by whom he reared six children, three sons and three daughters: William, John, George, Mary (Pickens), Betsy (Smith) and Peggy (Bibee). By his second marriage were born three sons, Charles and Elias, and two daughters, Patsy (Castro), Nancy (Castro), Sallie Cunningham, and Polly (Carney).

William, Captain in War of 1812, was born on the eastern shore of Maryland, July 24, 1769, and with his father removed to the South Branch of the Potomac. where he married Miss Susan Fink, in 1786. One son, Henry, the father of Charles Parsons, who recently died at Given, was born in Buchannon Fort. His father then moved to Warth Bottom, where John F., Martha and Hannah were born. He then moved, about the year 1801, to the bottom on which Ripley now stands, did the first clearing here, living on the bank of Mill Creek, just west of the house in which Mrs. Lester now resides. Here his wife and small child died, and were buried in the northwest corner of the old cemetery—the first persons buried there. His second wife was Miss Elizabeth Walker, of Walker's Creek, Harrison county, Virginia. He then moved to Sycamore and later to Frozen Camp, at which place he died, October 10, 1839. Captain William Parsons' children were Henry, John F., Martha, Hannah, Susan, Charles, William, Mary, Travis, Ann, Jerusha, Elizabeth, George Walker, Caroline, Janette and LaFayette.

Captain William's brother John married a Miss Greathouse, from which union the Stone Lick family of Parsons are descended.

His brother George, married a Miss Sleith, to whom were born George, who married a Woodruff; Ruth, married Abraham Sayre; Betsy, married a George Board; Sallie, married Edward Green; Charles, married an Allen; Amanda, married Charles Boyd; Jane, married Rev. Perry Louthen.

His brother Charles, married Miss Wolfe. His brother Elias first married Dollie Mayhew and then the Widow Graham, who after his death married Elijah Staats at Evans.

Starting from the Herald office to Charleston, by the most direct route are Parsons and part Parsons as follows: Okey Ellison, Mrs. Battrell, Andrew Parsons, Mrs. T. J. Sayre, Mrs. W. E. Staats, Mrs. J. C. Ellison, F. M. Downs, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Waybright, F. A. Castro, Virgil Castro, Mrs. Dennie Hicman, D. C. Shamblen, D. M. Shamblen, the Greenes and Mrs. R. P. Shinn, including, of course, children of the persons named, and we've missed the village of Fairplain and haven't reached Kenna, whose postmaster is Rev. A. B. Parsons. The name of Fred Garney should have been mentioned above as the fifth and Col. T. W. Parsons as the sixth, from the starting point—George C. Shatto the first.

THE PARSONS.

Parsons, prominent patriots in the American fight for freedom, doubtless did not sign the Declaration of Independence for the reasons of lack of love of country or loss of courage, but because the fates had willed that they should serve the cause in other capacities than as members of the celebrated Continental Congress. They were friends of George Washington, and in the supreme struggle of the seventies strongly supplemented "the father of his country" to the fateful finish. The fast friendship of the families continues under current conditions and one of the flourishing farmers of the fertile South Branch of the Potomac in Hampshire County, this State, is a Washington descendant of the family of the first President, while an adjoining or nearby neighbor is a prosperous Parsons of revolutionary stock. From this point many of the Parsons name went west to found fruitful families and happy homes, fell forests, create churches, establish schools and societies, construct colleges, and woo wealth and wisdom. The citizenship of the country from that county to California, shows the splendid success stamping them as forming a family of blood, brain and brawn.

They are no less prominent in the section east of Hampshire and are especially distinguished in the legal profession. The three volumes of "Parsons on Contracts," found in nearly every law library had reached the seventh edition as early as 1883, and "Parson's Laws of Business," is also a standard authority throughout the union. Hon. John E. Parsons, of New York, is today probably the highest salaried lawyer in America, and claims credit as attorney of the sugar manufacturers for the organization of the first trust in the United States.

In Jackson County they and their kin probably outnumber even the Castro and connections—they are in the professions and trades, on farms and in business circles, while officially one presides as circuit judge, another, county surveyor, the county assessor is a member of the family by marriage, the deputy sheriff is the son of a Parsons before her marriage, and so on, including boards of education and president of the local board of health, Dr. T. I. C. Parsons, to whom the study of history in which he excels, was always a pleasure, who began some year ago the collection of material for a family history.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Judge W. A. Parsons gave us a brief history of the Parsons family as Northmen, as Englishmen, as Americans and as West Virginians.

Business Meeting.

All went home feeling that they had attended the biggest and best family re-union of their lives.

One who was present.

The reader has probably guessed already that this week's honoring of the Parsons family was suggested by a reunion which began six years ago on the occasion of Mrs. Phœba Parsons attaining seventy-five years. It was initiated by Mesdames J. M. Kessel, Mary King Parsons and Louisa Kessel, who invited descendants of the late A. F. Parsons to meet at a re-union at Mt. Moriah church, where rested Mr. Parsons in his last sleep, on Saturday, August 10, his widow's birthday. The following year the invitation was extended to the descendants of William Parsons, and the five meetings following have been re-unions of the family in general.

A Ripley lady old enough to know, and herself of a distinguished family, says there are more fine looking people among the Parsons than any other name she has ever known. And there are many people who confirm her verdict.

In conclusion, may they, their ancestors and their descendants live long, enjoy happiness resulting from health, clear conscience, enviable environments, peace and plenty—and the prosperity coming as the reward of intelligent industry, far-sighted financiering and pure purpose.

THOMAS PARSONS.

Thomas Parsons was the son of William Parsons, his father settled on the eastern shore of Maryland, 1725. He was of English descent and it is absolutely certain this William Parsons is a descendant of the Parsons brothers who came from England to America 1635. It requires some arbitrary chronology to arrange the scraps of history gathered from various sources and traditions that have come down from generation to generation.

The records of Hampshire County show the following facts: A deed dated September 8, 1761, shows that Thomas Parsons was the executor of the will of Daniel Richardson, and as such conveyed to Henry Vanmeter a tract of land on Mill Creek in what was then Hampshire County, but is now Hardy County, West Virginia.

A deed from Phillip Brice, dated August 6, 1768, conveys to Thomas Parsons, 400 acres of land on Cabin Lick Run, in what is now Hampshire County. A deed from Luke Collins, dated March 13, 1770, conveys to Thomas Parsons lot number 16, on the South Branch River (this lot is one mile south-west of the town of Romney). The Western Turnpike crosses the river through it.

The record of Hampshire County indicate that Thomas Parsons had other large valuable tracts of land in what is now Hardy and Grant counties, W. Va., and he lived prior to 1761 in what is now Grant County.

This Thomas Parsons died between the 27th of May, 1771, and the 10th of March, 1772.

The will of Thomas Parsons dated the 27th day of May 1771, and recorded March 10, 1772. He devises to his sons Isaac and Baldwin, the land near Romney, bought of Luke Collins, and directs that Nathaniel Kuxandall, John Foreman and William Foreman shall divide it between the two, said Baldwin not being 21 years of age.

Then he gives one hundred pounds in money to Elizabeth Heinsman, widow of Dr. Heinsman, then he directs a tract of land of 200 acres on Mill Creek, another tract on Michael Sees Run (they were in what is now Hardy and Grant Counties) another tract on Lear Coat Creek (is now Hampshire County) to be sold, and the proceeds of such sale, to be divided between his sons Thomas, James Isaac and Baldwin, and his daughter Prudence and Arness. He also directs his personal property, including negroes, to be sold and the proceeds of such sale, and of all moneys, bonds, notes and accounts to be divided between his said children. He then devises to his sons-in-law William Welten and Robert Cunningham, 290 acres of land on North Mill Creek, adjoining the upper tract, now in Pendleton County.

The signature to his will indicates that at its date (May 27, 1771) he must have been a very old man, as it is written in very large tremulous letters.

THOMAS PARSONS JR. I.

Thomas Parsons, son of Thomas Parsons Sr., was of English descent and came with his father to Hampshire County Virginia.

He and his brother, Captain James, were the first explorers of Randolph County, Western Virginia, where they pre-empted the Horse Shoe lands in 1770. His adopted son had been captured by the Indians and carried to Ohio, where he was a prisoner several years. They allowed him to cross the Ohio river on a hunting exposition and he made his escape, he traveled east as he knew the South Branch lay in that direction and he came to Cheat river, where the town of Parsons is now located, here he noticed the fine bottom lands suited for farming and covered with walnut and cherry timber. He soon found he was not on a tributary of the Potomac, when he had traveled down to where St. George is located he saw the river turn due north. He retraced his steps to the mouth of the Horse Shoe Run and crossed the mountain to the east. With his tomahawk he blazed the large trees across the mountain from Lead Mine country to the South Branch. On reaching home he told his adopted father of the magnificent lands to the west. The young man contracted consumption from exposure with the Indians and died before Thomas and James Parsons could visit the newly discovered country. But they made their way over the mountain by this blazed trail and took possession of these lands.

At that time there was not any particular war between the Indians and white people, but the Indians were always on the lookout to kill any one they could. The Parsons brothers rode fine horses and made good time when they were visiting their lands, their path was over the Backbone and Alleghany mountains near Fairfax Stone. In order that they might successfully elude the Indians they put the shoes on their horses toes behind. On one occasion, Thomas Parsons Jr. I. made the trip alone from Moorfield.

When he arrived at the mouth of Horse Shoe Run and started to enter the house there he noticed the wet moccasin track on the door step. He re-mounted his horse, crossed the river into the Horse Shoe and made his way to the fort near where St. George is now, where he remained about ten days. On starting home as he crossed the river at the mouth of Horse Shoe Run an Indian hidden in the weeds near by hooted like an owl, but he knew its meaning and pushed ahead. The Indians followed him some miles gobbling like a turkey and using every means to trap him, but he put spurs to his horse and did not stop until reaching his home that night, a distance of some seventy miles.

Thomas lived on his plantation in what is now Hardy County, until he passed away. His remains lie in the family lot on his plantation and is marked by a stone.

THOMAS PARSONS' WILL.

In the name of God, Amen. I, Thomas Parsons, of the County of Hardy and State of West Virginia, being in perfect health and sound memory, thanks be to God for his mercy, calling unto mind the mortality of my body and knowing that it is appointed for all men once to die, do first recommend my soul unto God that gave it, and as far as my body I recommend it to the earth, from whence it came, to be buried in a christian-like decent manner at the discretion of my executors, nothing doubting but at the General Resurrection I shall receive the same again by the Mighty Power of God, and as touching such worldly estate wherewith it has pleased God to bless me with in this life, I give, devise and dispose of the same in the following manner and form:

Imprimis 1st, I give and bequeath unto William Parsons, my first born son, one plantation lying on Cheat River, which is the whole of his share.

Item 2nd—I give unto Isaac Parsons, my second son, one plantation on the mouth of Horse Shoe Run, which is the whole of his share.

Item 3rd—I give unto George Parsons, my third son, one plantation, adjoining his brother James Parsons' plantation on Cheat River, which is the whole of his share.

Item 4th—I give unto James Parsons, my fourth son, one plantation on Cheat River known by the name of Sims Bottom, lying on both sides of the river, which is the whole of his share.

Item 5th—I give unto my seven eldest daughters, Hester, Margaret, Annas, Catherine, Rebecca, Hulda and Susannah, eleven hundred and sixteen acres to be equally divided amongst them, the land lying on the Middle Fork of the Big Steexe Creek, in Monongalia County.

Item 6th—I give unto Miles Parsons, my fifth son, the full half of my plantation whereon I now live, his part to be taken off of the lower end, likewise one negro fellow named David, and the full half of a tract of land, 470 acres lying on the head of Maxwell's Run, 235 acres.

Item 7th—I give unto Thomas Parsons, my sixth son, the upper half of my plantation whereon I now live, likewise one negro fellow named Sampson, and the full half of a tract of land lying on the head of Maxwell's Run containing 470 acres.....235 acres, but in case of the above said Miles Parsons, Thomas Parsons or either of them should die without an heir the above land and negroes to fall to the other four brothers, but if only the one should die, the land and the negroes to fall to the survivor of the two.

My houses and lot in the town of Norefield and the remainder of my negroes to be sold when my youngest daughter, Elizabeth, shall arrive at the age of sixteen, the houses and lot to be rented until said time and the money arising therefrom to discharge my youngest daughter's portion as they shall become of age, Sarah, Hannah, Jane, Mary, Pamelia, Prudence and Elizabeth Parsons, which must be learned to read and write.

Item 8th—I give unto my beloved wife, Alsia Parsons, her bedstead and furniture and her third of my plantation I now live on, and her third of all my movables to hold the whole in her possession as long as she remains my widow, the remainder of my movables to be sold to discharge my debts and funeral expenses, my two youngest sons to be taught to read and write and cipher as far as the Golden Rule of Three.

I do make, constitute and appoint my beloved wife, Alsia Parsons, Adam Fisher and my beloved son, William Parsons, my sole executors of this my last will and testament.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this twenty-fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred, (1800).

Signed, sealed, published, declared and pronounced by the said Thomas Parsons as his last will and testament in his presence of us, Martin Leonard, Samuel White, Robert Porter, X (his mark).

At a Court held for Hardy County on the 12th day of December, 1804. This last will and testament, by Thomas Parsons, deceased, was proved by the oaths of Samuel White and Robert Porter, two of the witnesses thereunto, and is ordered to be recorded, and thereupon Adam Fisher and William Parsons, the executors therein named in open Court relinquished their right of executorship to the said will; whereupon on the motion of Alsia Parsons, the executrix named in the said will certified, is granted her for obtaining a probate thereof in due form, she having taken the oath of an executrix and together with James Miles her security, entered into and acknowledged a bond in the penalty of ten thousand dollars conditioned as the law directs. Teste.

WILLIAM PARSONS.

William Parsons, first son of Thomas and Mary Rennick Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia. He enlisted in the Revolutionary Army on the 6th day of February, 1777, in the 3rd Regiment, Light Dragoons, Continental troops; he was commissioned Lieutenant Nov. 1, 1777; then commissioned Captain, after the battle of Eutaw, South Carolina, by order of the War Department, and served under this commission for the balance of the war.

In recognition of his services he was allotted three hundred acres of land and six hundred dollars.

When he returned from the army, he was married and settled on the upper portion of his fathers plantation, later he moved with his wife and five children to Randolph County, Virginia, upon the land pre-empted by his father, Thomas Parsons Jr. At this time there was only a trail across the Alleghany Mountains to Fairfax Stone down Horse Shoe Run to where he expected to locate. Imagine what an undertaking it must have been to reach this land in the wilderness with all their household goods in a two-wheeled cart. The women and children were on horseback with babies in their laps. He built a log cabin and made a comfortable home for his family. Later he built a brick house, perhaps the first brick house in the County at that time. In those days it was considered a mansion. and today it stands as one of the old landmarks.

He was a firm believer in education and together with his three brothers he employed a private tutor and gave his children a practical education. He was appointed County Judge and every one who came under his jurisdiction were satisfied with the verdict. He would often bring the disputing parties together, and settle the matter out of court.

He and all of his family were Episcopalians, but in the absence of his denomination at his new home, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church and was one of the most prominent members of the Bethel Church, and he was one of the first to donate toward the building of the first church.

He was noted for his generosity and his hospitality, the early circuit rider was sure of a hearty welcome whenever he made his way to this home. He gave two orphan children a home and a father's care until they arrived at years of maturity.

His faithful wife lived many years after he passed away and the negroes cared for her tenderly. She died at the home of her daughter, near Beverly, Virginia, loved and respected by all who knew her.

WILLIAM PARSONS' WILL.

In the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, January 11th, I, William Parsons of Randolph County, and State of Virginia, in the presence of Almighty God and in my proper senses, do hereby make my last will and testament, after bequeathing my body to the dust and my soul to God that gave it, I bequeath my property in the following manner, namely: to Job Parsons, my eldest son, I bequeath this tract of land he now lives on; to Solomon, my second son, I bequeath my home place, that is the tract of land I now live on, except one-third of said place which I bequeath to Catherine Parsons, my wife, so long as she lives, to be surveyed off the lower end so as to embrace the house.

To my daughters Elizabeth Taggart, Mary Taggart, Hannah Parsons, Nancy Daniels, Anis Milly and Malinda Parsons I bequeath one thousand dollars each with what I have paid and I may pay against my death to each, to be taken out of said sums, and the balance to be paid after my death. To my three eldest daughters above named I also bequeath a bed and reasonable clothing for said beds apiece, the rest of the household estate to be divided equally amongst the six daughters above named, except my desk I bequeath to Malinda at the appraisement as a part of her thousand, said bequeath not to take place until after the death of my wife. As to the rest of my movable property, I bequeath it in the following manner to be appraised by three disinterested appraisers to be given to my six daughters, (except the wagon Solomon is to have at the appraisement if he desires it) above named as a part of the thousand dollars I have bequeathed them; provided, nevertheless, if my daughters refuse to take the said property at the appraisement, then the property shall be put up for sale and any of my children may bid it off, and the property of said sale may be applied to paying said daughters their bequeath; provided, nevertheless, that said moveable property shall amount to more than the thousand dollars bequeathed to each of my six daughters, the said remaining property shall be divided equally amongst said six daughters above named.

N. B. I reserve one horse and three cows out of my movable property for Catherine my wife during her lifetime, and then to be disposed of at her death as above directed.

I further direct my administrators to prepare said property and appoint the time for division as soon as convenient.

6th—I bequeath the Island place or tract of land lying a little below my home place to Solomon Parsons, my second son. I also bequeath him a small tract of land against his place on the west side of Shavers Fork, or on the lower end of the place he now lives on.

7th—I further direct that Job Parsons and Solomon Parsons, my sons be appointed as administrators.

8th—I further bequeath my blacks, Titus to live with Catherine my wife and Solomon my son as long as he lives, and that he may be supported, as he is old. Buck, a negro man, and Emily, a negro woman, to live and labor for Catherine Parsons my wife as long as she lives, and at her death if Job and Solomon Parsons, my administrators, think they have not by their labor paid for what I gave for them they are to hire them out until they have paid for what I gave for them. If said Buck and Emily should have children they are to go free with them, and the profits of said hire to be equally divided and paid over to my six daughters above named, over and above the thousand dollars I bequeathed to each of them, and if after said Buck and Emily have paid for their price I paid, they and their children are to go free. I further direct that Solomon, my son, keep them and pay the hire if they have to be hired, and if he does not want to do so to hire them in the family if possible.

N. B. Nevertheless, if there should be on hand at my decease a stock of drove cattle, they are to be fattened and sold to the best advantage by the executors. I further bequeath that Solomon and Job Parsons shall have, or my administrators, one year from the time of entering as administrators to commence the payment bequeathed to my daughters, they shall then pay $500.00 per year until all be paid. In witness whereof, I have set my hand and seal this 17th day of January, 1828.

ELIZABETH PARSONS TAGGART.

Elizabeth Parsons, eldest daughter of William and Catherine Stoker Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia. She received her education from the first schools established by the four Parsons brothers on Cheat River. After her marriage to James Taggart they moved to a home given her by her father, now known as the "Blackman Farm."

The soil of this land was of the finest quality; a large body of it was covered with oak, walnut and sugar maple trees. In the springtime, the blooming of the grove of sugar trees afforded a picture of rare beauty. The silver gray tinged with yellow and white gave the landscape a soft finish. The sap from the sugar trees was boiled in large iron kettles and made into sugar. During the sugar making season the young folks would have parties and pass evenings of much sweetness.

On this beautiful spot there was a large two-story log house which was furnished with hickory chairs, walnut tables and every other home-made furniture. The linens, quilts and coverlets were made by her own hands. She was what would be called in these days a "hustler." She made all her children's clothes from flax and wool which she had spun and woven herself, and often sewed half the night to make the garments. Through her skill and energy and ambition, prosperity smiled upon her home. She labored bravely and faithfully for the uplift of her children.

The orchard of "Blackman Farm" was the best in the country; the garden a bower of roses, pinks and sweet Williams. How well I remember sitting 'neath the apple tree eating the delicious apples. Though the trees were covered with moss, and the old fashioned log house was inhabited by bats and owls it did not prevent me from weaving romantic stories of the family who had dwelt there long years ago.

Elizabeth Parsons Taggart was a member of the M. E. Church from her youth, and was a devout worshiper of God. She was a leader in the singing, a teacher in the Sunday School, and often leader in the prayer meeting. The Church was dear to her in all its services. Her lovable nature won for her many friends, and those who visited her when the end drew near could never forget her beautiful faith and clear vision of the Eternal as she was passing through the Gate and heard with new understanding the great words "For God so loved the world, He gave His only begotten Son." She has many descendants in West Virginia and the Middle West.

HANNAH CATHERINE TAGGART CHENOWETH.

Hannah C. Taggart, daughter of James and Elizabeth Parsons Taggart, was born on the homestead (now known as the Blackman farm.) Here she grew to womanhood enjoying all the comforts of life. She was a beautiful girl and very much admired for her sweet loving disposition and was a great favorite with the social set. She was bereft of her mother at a tender age; how sad and lonely was the home, but she looked to Christ through her blinding tears for guidance and put all her trust in Him.

After her marriage, she lived near Beverly until the first son was born in the year of 1852, she migrated to Hancock County, Illinois, later to Iowa, finally settling in Warsaw, Illinois, where the husband enlisted in the U. S. army, 1861. He was in many engagements in Missouri and other sections of the country. He was mustered out of service when disabled and died soon after.

She was the mother of seven children, four have passed away. All her life was spent in the service of the Master; she was a great church worker and died in the full triumphs of faith. Her remains sleep in the family lot, in Walker township.

M. T. CHENOWETH.

M. T. Chenoweth, first son of Alpheus and Hannah C. Taggart Chenoweth, was born near Beverly in Randolph County, Virginia.

His education began at St. Mary's Academy and was continued at Bloomfield, Iowa and Warsaw, Illinois.

In the spring of 1864, he enlisted in the 28th Illinois Volunteers, company E, and was in the service until October, 1865. He was in active duty in the southern part of the Mississippi river, and was present at the capture of Mobile. At the close of the war he returned to Warsaw, and made his home with his widowed mother until his marriage.

The death of his nine year old daughter has been one of his greatest sorrow—she was the pride of his life. His wife was the daughter of James and Sarah L. Rankin, born in Adams County, Illinois, she passed away May 8, 1911, after a long illness.

He is doing a Mercantile business in Hickory Ridge and has been postmaster eighteen years of that place. He is a man that is highly respected. By energy and his shrewd business tact he has accumulated wealth and can retire from business at any time.

MARY PARSONS TAGGART.

Mary Parsons, second daughter of William and Catherine Stoker Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia, and was a small girl when her parents migrated to western Virginia. She was educated in the first school established in that vicinity. She was taught to spin, weave and sew when very young, as this was considered a great accomplishment in those days. The eldest daughters were kept busy sewing for the younger ones.

Her father objected to her engagement to John Taggart, but the young folks made arrangements to meet at a place where a minister was staying over night, and be married. Mary arrived first and had to wait for her lover. In after years of wedded life her husband would laughingly remind her of the fact that she had been so anxious to marry him that she reached the trysting place first, to which she would reply that for doing so was that she had the best horse. The elopers were forgiven by the bride's parents, and a tract of land given to them lying along Cheat river, now known as the "Blackman Farm."

The house they built on the land was not a palatial residence, but sufficiently costly and tasty to satisfy any modern ambition. It disclosed an air of neatness, home life and contentment that constitute true happiness; for all joys of life lie in three words, "health, peace and competence." I have no record of how many years of perfect happiness was enjoyed in this home. Twelve fine healthy children were born of this union and reared on this prosperous farm.

Two daughters were married and pushed out their bark upon the sea of action; the sons were entering upon the domain of manhood and desired to meet the vicissitudes and varying changes so common to the career of all. The parents decided to move to Buford, Highland County, Ohio.

This proud father and devoted mother showed an interest seen only in families where the marriage vow is based upon a foundation of infinite love. This family was noted for their generosity, hospitality and integrity; the light of truth and honesty was about them.

In 1851, John Taggart and his family moved from Buford, Ohio, to Tazewell County, Illinois. Very few of the members of Mary Parsons Taggart's descendants are living at the present time.

He was a graduate of the Wesleyan college, and was the pastor of the M. E. church at the time of his death at Mattoon, Illinois. His wife was a graduate of Conover Seminary, at Bloomington. Her ability as a student was such that she was made one of the teachers of the seminary.

Mrs. Bauman was a member of the M. E. church for many years, she was president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, and president of the Ladies' Aid Society for many years. She was the daughter of James Porter, and a native of Pennsylvania.

JOB PARSONS, SR.

Eldest son of William and Catherine Stoker Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia. He was a man of fine physique and possessed a powerful constitution, and was capable of enduring almost anything. He was six feet four inches in height and weighed 250 pounds. When he was in his nineteenth year, he enlisted in the army of the war of 1812, and did duty at Fort Maiggs and Norfolk, Virginia. While he was at Norfolk he was taken sick with camp fever and his aunt, Mary Parsons Hanse, had him carried to her home and she nursed him to health. He returned to his regiment and continued in the service until the war closed. After his return home he married Jemima Ward, and moved on his plantation and engaged in farming and stock raising; his herds of cattle, sheep and horses were of the best.

He was a great lover of hunting and always kept a pack of hounds. It was his delight to hear them cross the distant mountains, deeply baying on the trail of a deer; such sport was indulged in by the people along Cheat river.

When the civil war began, Job Parsons was a warm sympathizer of the South, and expressed his sentiments by casting his vote for secession. In October, 1861, the report came to him in the evening that the Unionists were coming to take the property of the Southern sympathizers. The following morning he arose early and caught his best horses and hurried off to a place in the woods above the "Yellow Rocks." Scarcely had he reached the place of concealment when the soldiers came down the road with a field glass, searching every nook and corner of his premises. They spied the horses and made a dash for them; they met him coming down the path with his old rifle—he was looking for a safe place to conceal it. As the "blue coats" confronted him, he threw his rifle to his shoulder and called "halt," "Ground arms" and they obeyed his command. Enjoying their surprise for a moment, he said, "now, I suppose I am your prisoner." They disarmed him, taking all his horses with them, carried him a prisoner to Rowelsburg, to the headquarters of General Kelley. He poured vials of wrath upon the head of the commanding officer when he was taken to his quarters, telling him he fought in the war of 1812 to make America a free land, and now freedom was denied him. The General was so confused and ashamed that he would not answer but gave him his liberty and horses, and he returned home, and was not molested again except by the "Dry Fork Home Guards," better known at the "Swamp Dragoons," a name given to them by Parsons. The rifle, his old friend of 1812, could never be found, though a diligent search was made for it by his grandson, J. H. Glascock.

He spent the most of his life on the plantation land pre-empted by his grandfather. He dispensed true Southern hospitality to his friends and all who came to his home. His last days were spent with his daughter, Emma Parsons, near St. George, West Virginia.

Mary Parsons, eldest daughter of Job and Jemina Parsons died at the birth of her first child, Lemuel, who went to Iowa with his father, died soon after reaching manhood.

Emily Parsons' record is found with that of Abraham Parsons.

JACOB WARD PARSONS.

Jacob Ward Parsons, first son of Job Parsons, Sr., was born in Randolph County, Virginia. At an early age he showed the ability to become a good agriculturist, and in his nineteenth year he assumed charge of his father's plantation.

After his marriage he bought an acreage on the mountain and began life on his own account. His capital consisted principally of good health, energy and fine business qualities. The land was fertile and he soon converted it into a grazing farm and stocked it with the best cattle and sheep. He was one that believed in the old saying, "If you want to be absolutely sure that a thing is done properly do it yourself." He applied all of his physical strength to improve the home and add comfort and happiness to those depending on him, and perhaps there never was a time in his life that he enjoyed more contentment and peace of mind than in this log house surrounded by his young children.

When the children attained the age when they must be educated, he moved down on Cheat river near the schools and gave them every advantage of an education. He was elected high Sheriff of Tucker County in 1863, on the Republican ticket, and held many minor offices while the Republicans were in power.

His ambition reached beyond being a servant for the people; he was desirous of owning more land. He made a trip to Iowa with the intention of locating there, but West Virginia, with her ten thousand hills had an infatuation for him. He sold all his lands in Tucker county, and moved to Grant county, West Virginia, October, 1867, and purchased large acreage near where his ancestors had located in 1700. He engaged in the buying and selling of live stock. After his health failed, he retired from business. He was well known for his hospitality; no one in need was ever turned away from his door. He was a steadfast member of the M. E. church and gave liberally toward the support of the cause of Christianity.

During his protracted illness, he was never known to murmur a word of complaint. His last days were spent with his daughter in Davis, West Virginia. His remains were laid in the Bethel churchyard, and now he and his faithful wife, who has joined the majority, rest beside each other until the dawn of the Perfect Day.

Jemima Parsons, second daughter of Solomon Parsons, was born on the plantation in the old brick house which is still standing. She married Jacob W. Parsons and they moved into a region where it was almost an unbroken wilderness. A log house was their dwelling place. At that time the woods were filled with wild animals and their cries were familiar sounds of the night around their clearing.

She spun, wove and made all her children's clothing, and through all her toil she enjoyed perfect health and happiness. In after years she could look back to those days with joy and pleasure, for sorrow had not entered the home.

She was a sweet voiced mother with eyes in whose clear depths the love light shone; her hands, worn with toil, gently guided the footsteps of her children over rough places and smoothed their pillow in sickness, ever reaching out to them in yearning tenderness. Blessed is the memory of such a mother. It will float to her children like the beautiful perfume of some wooded blossoms. Years may fill great drifts between her and them, but they will not hide from their sight the glory of her unselfish love.

CAROLINE ELIZABETH PARSONS.

Caroline E. Parsons was born in Randolph County, Virginia. She was quite a young lady when her parents moved to Grant County, West Virginia, where she was married and for a few years was supremely happy in her cosy home, but the cruel finger of sorrow was laid upon her; she was left to battle alone with four children. She being a full fledged Parsons, with a strain of Ward and Stocker stock she did not lose energy but journeyed down the turbulent stream of life and has been permitted to view the bright light of victory.

She and her second husband migrated to Freemont, Nebraska, 1880, and located. They have all home comforts and take great pleasure in entertaining their friends.

BLAKENEY PARSONS.

Blakeney Parsons, fourth son of Jacob W. Parsons, was born in Grant County, West Virginia. He was given the advantage of a college education. He entered the profession of law and soon gained prominence in his practice in Grant and other counties throughout the state. He battled for the right and won a reputation as a lawyer of ability. He was counsel in many important cases. His business was increasing and he would have become distinguished and stood in high favor with the bar, but typhoid fever carried him away from the bosom of his family, and the great future of a brilliant man was cut short by the Reaper. He left a young wife and son to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and father. God's vision is ever clear; His way is right.

CORA PARSONS GROVES.

Cora Parsons, seventh daughter of Jacob Ward Parsons, was born in Grant County, in a beautiful large dwelling surrounded by a large grove of trees, at which place she grew to womanhood and enjoyed all the happiness of a country life on a farm. She received the advantage of a good public school education.

Her wedding occurred from the homestead, and was one of the most brilliant events socially of the season.

She has reared and educated the daughter of her brother, having no children of her own. She tenderly nursed her aged mother in her last days, giving her all the comforts which was possible. She resides in Harmon, West Virginia.

CATHERINE PARSONS JOHNSON.

Catherine Parsons, third daughter of Job Parsons, Sr., was born on the plantation. At the age of fourteen she was left motherless, with the care of her young sisters and brothers and the household. It was a great responsibility for one of her years, but never could a mother have lavished upon them more affection and attention, always counting it a pleasure to do all in her power for their comfort.

After her marriage she went to live at Johnson's Mills, Barbour County, Virginia, where she raised her family. Her genial, kind nature won for her many friends. She was liberal to a fault and was ever ready to assist any one who was unfortunate or in need. She was a woman of wonderful courage. During the civil war they were annoyed by bands of soldiers who went around the country pilfering and taking away anything that suited their fancy. On one occasion she found one of these petty thieves in her house. She searched his pockets for the plunder he had gathered and then said to him: "Now you march out of here on double quick time." He obeyed the order. She often guarded her meat house with an axe under her arm to prevent them from taking all her winter store of provisions. She was a true daughter of Revolutionary stock.

For many years she was ardently attached to the church, and during her long, protracted illness, about her bed-side rested a spirit of faith and peace that made Heaven a reality. This strength and beauty of character is given to those who trust in the Lord.

On this side death ; but when they cross the tide ;
Over the waves the spirit hands may reach,
She will greet them with the olden smile ;
And speak to them in the old tender speech.

PHEBE ANN PARSONS GLASCOCK.

Phebe Ann Parsons, fourth daughter of Job Parsons, Sr., was born on the plantation. At the age of twelve years she had the misfortune to lose her mother and the care of the younger children was left to her. She was of a kind disposition, and was never more happy then when she was bestowing upon them her motherly love.

In her seventeenth year she married Spencer Glascock, and they walked the ways of life's pathway together sixty-six years. Her education was limited, but she possessed a keen sense of humor and often indulged in witticism. She was a good reader of human nature and when once she formed her opinion of the character of a person, it was seldom necessary for her to change it.

The welfare of her family was one of her life studies; she gave them many a pleasant surprise, and was never known to forget a birthday, always bestowing upon them a beautiful present. No one who enjoyed the hospitality of her home could doubt that she entertained in a royal manner and with a free will.

In the home where sickness and death had come, she made her way, and not only extended her sympathy, but offered her prayers and ministered to them in material things, often bringing relief with the labor of her own hands. In eternity we believe many will rise up and call her blessed.

She united with the M. E. church quite young, and to the end of her long and eventful life, she was a faithful, consistent Christian. She was seldom absent from the church or prayer meeting when it was possible for her to be present, and rarely ever failed to take part, testifying in the class-meeting to the edification of all who heard her. For many years she never failed to read a portion of God's word daily, and when she was too feeble to read, she had others read the Bible to her. In her departure, the church lost a faithful and valued member, her husband a faithful and loving wife, her children, their best earthly friend, who lavished upon them her love, unstinted and unfeigned; but they would not call her back again, though they miss her so much in the home.

"One by one the Father gathers
 Choicest flowers rich and rare,
 And transplants them in his garden;
 They will bloom forever there.
 One by one the Lord will call us
 When our labor here is done,
 And then, as we cross the river,
 We will meet her, one by one."

SPENCER GLASCOCK.

Spencer Glascock was born on a farm in Barbour County, Virginia, (now West Virginia) the son of William and Alsa Glascock. He was sheriff of Barbour County during the civil war; he was honored by his fellow citizens at different times by being elected to civil offices. The preservation of his physical forces and his intellectual faculties, was a marvel to all who knew him, and all the more because his life from early youth to his advanced years, was one of toil and harship. He was a staunch Republican and a very patriotic man. In the days of the civil war it cost something to be true to the old flag, but he never swerved in his devotion to the Government. He was confined to his bed seven months before the end came, and never could a father have lavished upon him more loving attention and care than he was given by his daughter and granddaughter with whom he made his home for many years. He united with the M. E. church at the age of fifteen and remained a faithful member of the same until his departure from this life.

To one and all that inquired about his condition of soul, and prospect of Heaven, he would joyously reply: "I have been ready for many years and I am only waiting for the Father's good time to send for me to come home." Happily will it be for all if they can look upon the end with such composure.

JOB HARRISON GLASCOCK.

Job H. Glascock, first son of Spencer and Phebe A. Parsons Glascock was born on a farm in Barbour County, Virginia (now West Virginia). He was educated in a private school. Co., for four years, resigning this position when he moved to Kansas, where he is engaged in the mercantile business. He made a tour of California, 1902, and visited his many relatives and enjoyed the mild winter. He now resides in Hutchison, Kansas.

HANNAH PARSONS POLING.

Hannah Parsons, first daughter of Job and Jemima Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia, and was reared on the plantation. At an early age she was taught to sew, spin and weave. She was of a romantic disposition and her agreeable social qualities made her one of the most brilliant figures of that period. She was left a widow two years after her marriage with two children. She fought every inch of her way through life and knew what a good fight through life meant.

After her second marriage, they moved to Warren County, Iowa, and lived on a farm for several years, then to Abington, Illinois, in 1866. She returned to Virginia to visit her many friends and aged father soon after they moved to Galesburg, Illinois, and engaged in keeping the New York Exchange Hotel, and was successful. After selling out, they moved to Aurora, Illinois, and bought an acreage near town where she passed a peaceful life.

She spent the winter of 1886, in California, with her many friends and enjoyed the beautiful flowers and climate. She was a member of the M. E. church three score years and the church was very dear to her with all its services. She was a woman of noble character and tender impulses and was loved by all who knew her. She retired at night in her usual health; the following morning the aged husband found the angels had taken her home. She had passed beyond the mists that blind us here into a new and larger life.

SUSAN PARSONS POLING.

Susan Parsons, fifth daughter of Job and Jemima Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia, and grew to womanhood on the plantation. She was a fine horsewoman and could ride or drive any horse among her father's band of thoroughbreds.

After her marriage she moved on a farm in Barbour County, where she lived until 1855, when they moved to Iowa, making the journey overland with teams, she driving the carriage all the way.

They purchased land in Warren Conuty, improved it and raised a fine crop the first year, and were very comfortably situated. Her husband was stricken with fever in the fall of 1859, and passed away, leaving her with five children. Soon after this sad misfortune, she moved to Indianola, that her children would have the advantage of a good education. She opened a dress-making parlor and in a short time she was doing a thriving business and prosperity smiled upon her for a season. She longed to see her old home again and in the Spring of 1864, she and her two youngest children made a trip to West Virginia to visit her many relatives. She had a very enjoyable visit and returned to her home and resumed business again. Soon after this her eldest son graduated from the college and was stricken with fever and passed away. He was a capable young man and could fill any responsible position and would have been a staff to lean upon, but her wonderful willpower carried her through this sorrow. This might have been termed a second widowhood.

In October, 1911, she made a trip to California from DesMoines, Iowa, alone, to spend the winter with relatives. A party was given her by Mrs. E. Kalar on her 82nd birthday, four generations being present. A younger sister was there whom she had not seen since 1864.

She returned to her home to attend the wedding of her great granddaughter in June, and she may live to see the fifth generation. She has lived a life of devotion to the service of God, and when her hands are folded for the last time and rest has finally settled on her sweet, patient face, it will have the happy reflection of a life of goodness and no duty neglected.

JEMIMA E. PARSONS FANSLER.

Jemima E. Parsons, daughter of Job Parsons, Sr., was born on the plantation in Virginia. All of her girlhood days were passed in absolute freedom in the country, and this kind of life produced for her a rosy freshness and perfect health. In those days it was not considered good taste to ever speak of maladies, and there was no need of beauty parlors. A girl succeeded in retaining her youth and beauty by healthy exercise.

She was an excellent needlewoman, and made all her own clothes. Her hat was always trimmed with a crisp new ribbon and beneath it a fresh rosy face of a girl that was sure of herself.

She spent two seasons in Washington, D. C., a guest of the Towers family, who gave many social functions to her honor. They were close friends of her family and were entertained on the plantation during the hunting season each year.

After her marriage she moved to Horse Shoe Run and has lived there on a farm fifty years. She visited her sons in Georgia in 1906 and attended the Parsons' reunion in 1908 and was in perfect health after her years of toil, bringing up six sons and two daughters. The sons are all farmers, except one who resides in Menlo, Georgia, who is engaged in the photographer business. There are twenty-nine grandchildren. The greatest part of her children reside in West Virginia.

She gave her widowed mother all the love and attention that was possible in her last days, and there was not one thought of self for any sacrifice made for this faithful, aged mother.

Her friends receive a warm welcome in her home and she has many true friends who brighten her way. She has been a member of the church ever since she was fifteen, and her happy face is an index to her character of a life of goodness and devotion to those who are near and dear to her.

JANETTE PARSONS HANSFORD.

Janette Parsons Hansford, daughter of Job Parsons, Sr., was born on the plantation in Randolph County, Virginia. She was a girl the world would welcome in her rosy freshness and was charmingly attractive. She had the distinction peculiar to a well bred southern girl. She as quiet in manner. Her dress was remarkable for its simplicity. She was a good seamstress and very domestic and fulfilled her obligations as a wife and mother perfectly. She cultivated charm, good nature and usefulness. In her home she entertained pleasantly and her hospitality was flavored with a grace that was worth a great deal to her many friends.

She was a member of the church many years, and when death came, her trust was all in God, that he would guide her children through life. She was greatly missed in her home and by her loved ones, but they rejoiced in the hope of a happy reunion. Since then her husband and all her children, but two, have joined her in that land beyond the river.

REBECCA PARSONS BONNIFIELD.

Rebeccan Parsons, third daughter of Job Parsons, Sr., was born in Randolph County, Virginia, and grew to womanhood on the plantation, and belonged to a class of people who know not the meaning of the word fail, and whose determination brings to them the accomplishment of their purposes. She was always equal to any emergency.

On July 13, 1861, at 12 o'clock, the battle of Correck's Ford was in progress and Garnett's army was retreating. Every one was taking to the woods for safety. At this time she was passing through a great ordeal, when a woman goes "down into the valley of the shadow of death;" but she did not allow her hands to fall in her lap and shake as leaves are tossed in a hollow by the wind, and though the rain was falling in torrents, she and her sister rode horseback to her aunt's mountain home four miles distant and a daughter was born soon after she arrived. She did not suffer any illness after the exciting event.

In October, 1861, a band of pillaging soldiers were camped in Abraham Parsons' mill yard and an Ohio Volunteer was going to ride away on the only horse left on the premises. Her sister called for her to break the soldier's grip from the rein of the bridle and with one blow he fell heels over head. When he arose his fury was beyond bounds but after the third round he sneaked away and decided walking was good. They led the horse away amidst the cheers of the soldiers, who declared the brave southern woman had won a fair victory.

During the war she and her sister plowed, sowed and gathered the crop and cared for the stock on the farm.

In 1867, she sailed from New York for California, arriving in San Francisco after a rough voyage. She has been successful and owns three hundred and twenty acres of fertile land in Fresno County, which is all under cultivation.

When she was in her 70th year, she walked a mile carrying a nail keg to secure a swarm of bees that was hanging on a bush. She was stung many times by the bees but they are now doing business in the keg.

She is fond of her home and its comforts, and takes great pleasure with her daughter and family and her numerous friends are always made welcome.

Lavina J. Parsons, fourth daughter of Job and Sarah Losh Parsons, was born on the old Parsons plantation in Virginia, she possessed a contented disposition and was fond of her home, her greatest pleasure was to be with the family circle; during the war she put her hand to the plow and helped to till the soil; it would take some time to chronicle the many happenings and vicissitudes to which the family was heir to during those days, many with less courage and determination would have been discouraged but she had the true metal in her makeup and was a prize worth winning; after her marriage she moved into a locality that was very lonely, but devoted her time to making quilts and weaving carpet that her home might be comfortable. She succeeded in all her undertakings and won the respect of the entire community in which she lived.

A short time before her death she had moved into the new house she so much desired, but was not in good health and did not enjoy her cosy home; her friends were always welcome.

ELMIRA PARSONS HULL.

Elmria Parsons Hull, fifth daughter of Job and Sarah Losh Parsons, was born on the home plantation in Randolph County, Virginia.

Here in this beautiful picturesque rural place where the sugar maple, beech and other woods are blended in a verdant wall of quiet freshness, the large old fashioned house with its wide open fire place in winter was piled full of logs, the blazing fire made it very comfortable on a winter night. From the bluff could be seen the valley below, the fields of corn and acres of small grain and grass extending back from the river on the bottom land.

She was one of the gang of female farmers on the plantation during the civil war and her ambition did not permit her to shirk. After her marriage she migrated to California and resides in San Jose. She is honored with seven grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The family record of Emma Parsons will be in Solomon Parsons' record.

JOB W. PARSONS JR., II.

Job W. Parsons, first son of Job Parsons Sr., was born on the old home plantation, in Randolph County, Virginia. He inherited the great love of sport which is characteristic in the Parsons family; he was an enthusiastic fisherman and always kept a pack of hounds, for fox hunting and deer. He passed away early in life, leaving an aged father, mother and a wife with two children to battle with the world.

SOLOMON PARSONS.

Solomon Parsons, second son of William Parsons, was born in Harely County, Virginia. He received his education from the first schools that were organized, after his father located in western Virginia. Personally he was six feet and his bearing was very dignified. It was not given to many persons to know him intimately; this was due to his quiet, retiring disposition.

He enlisted in the war in 1812, and did duty in the eastern part of the state. Soon after the close of the war he married and moved on land now in possession of Lemuel W. Parsons, his grandson.

He was progressive in business and always made it a rule to satisfy himself that an investment was safe before he paid over the ready cash. Those are the kind of men who reap the golden harvest, and improve the morals and intelligence of the country by examples of honesty and industry. He was one who did not hang back in a good cause, and did to others as he wished others to do to him. Those are our great men.

His descendants can still be found in the Virginia hills and valleys. They are not all rich in the world's goods, but none of them are too poor to be honest. They have not all held offices; they have not all fought battles nor seen distant lands, but they are all upright citizens and have carried forward the work of their ancestors, and have kept the lands inherited by them from generation to generation until the present time.

Solomon Parsons was a member of the M. E. church, and a devout Christian, a good citizen and a devoted husband. He was in delicate health for several years, and gradually life gave way. His faithful wife reared the family of seven children and lived to a good old age and was honored, respected and loved by all the people who knew her. Both, father, mother and family are resting in the Bethel churchyard. "Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord, that walketh in His way.

WILLIAM W. PARSONS.

William W. Parsons, first son of Solomon and Mary Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. At the age of fifteen he was left fatherless, and the management of the farm was left to him. Fortunately, his great amount of energy and force of character made him equal to the burden.

From his earliest years he was an attentive and extensive reader. He was well posted on theology, and his general intelligence made him prominent in the M. E. church and the Sunday school work. He was an ordained minister when quite young, and the beautiful valley of Cheat river was the field of his life work. He engaged in evangelist work in the different churches in the surrounding country. He had a deep voice with a mystic power that awakened men to new duties and convictions essential to a higher life.

He built a large, commodious house on his homestead, which was located on a slope at the foot of Backbone Mountain, which rose up in grandeur, and afforded a scene of wildest beauty. Giant trees, overgrown with a tangle of wild grapevines, and the tall sugar maple trees, cast their flickering shadows across the green verdure; a stream of cool, clear water bubbled down from a spring, and broke in a soft murmur on the pebble bar, as it tumbled over the rocks down in the foaming pool; and the wild partridge beat his gong in the green woods.

The soil was fertile and produced good crops. An orchard that was planted, bore fine fruit of different varieties. In the meadows strawberries grew in abundance. In all the world there was not a more beautiful, peaceful place for one to rest after their labor. Here he and his faithful wife lived happily and reared their family. Prosperity was beginning to dawn upon them, when the wife was taken. He passed away a few years later, and they both sleep side by side on the homestead.

SOLOMON H. PARSONS.

Solomon H. Parsons, first son of Wililam W. and Hester Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. He grew to manhood on the homestead. Being a studious young man, he gained his education by attending the winter school and studying on rainy days—farmer boys did not have much time to get into mischief those days. He was an exemplary young man, and filled all the stations of life honorably and faithfully.

When the civil war was declared, he enlisted in Capt. William Hall's Company, U. S. A., but was not engaged in active duty. He married Hannah A. Parsons, daughter of James Parsons. She lived a very short time. His second wife was Mary Crouch of Huttonsville. To this union was born two children. He died of bronchitis near Huttonsville. His son grew to manhood and now resides in Oklahoma. The daughter married but is now dead, leaving children, who lived in the vicinity of Huttonsville, West Virginia.

LUCINDA PARSONS VANSKOY.

Lucinda Parsons, first daughter of William W. and Hester Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia (now Tucker County, West Virginia). She received her education from private schools and was taught the important lesson of housekeeping.

After her marriage she moved on a farm near New Interest. She was taken with a severe cold and passed away leaving her children at an age when they needed the guiding hand of a mother. She united with the church when a girl and was a devoted christian woman.

ADONIJAH B. PARSONS.

Adonijah B. Parsons, second son of William W. and Hester Ward Parsons, was born in the old brick house built by his great-grandfather. His early life was spent on the farm. He received his education from private tutors, and for several years he engaged in teaching school, but during the time he was reading law. He was admitted to the bar at St. George, 1872. He was elected prosecuting attorney for one term. He was elected school commissioner and secretary of the Board of Education. In 1882 he was elected to represent Randolph and Tucker counties in the legislature. He filled all these offices with honor and ability. He was a prominent leader of the Democratic party.

A. B. Parsons was principally a land and criminal lawyer. In chancery practice his business was extensive. He studied the modes of presenting an argument in the most forcible manner, and in this there were few his equal. Scarcely a case came before the courts in which he was not counsel for one side or the other. His practice extended through the courts from the bench of Justice to the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.

He was very successful in his business, and would have amassed a fortune had he not failed in health. He was a great sufferer for many years, but bore it with wonderful patience. He died at his home in Parsons, W. Virginia, 1909.

JOB PARSONS JR.

Job Parsons, Jr., second son of Solomon and Mary Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. When quite young his father passed away; he and his brother managed the farm with the help of the old negro man; they went to the district school three months in the winter, where pupils sat on slabs flat side up, and learned their a-b-c's but getting no idea of the true foundation of an education.

He was a staunch Democrat and his sympathies was with the south, but by being quiet and not expressing his opinion, he was not molested during the civil war.

In his hatred of shams, hollowness and hypocrisy he sometimes said things that awakened criticism, but those who knew him best never doubted the sincerity of his motive; he was a very hospitable man and enjoyed the society of his friends. His last days were spent on his farm in the Holly Meadows, where he passed peacefully away, surrounded by his sons, daughters and loving wife.

WARD PARSONS
Son of Solomon Parsons

WARD PARSONS

Ward Parsons, third son of Solomon Parsons, was born on land pre-empted by his great-grandfather in 1770, now Parsons, West Virginia. He built the first house in the town. The old log house was destroyed by fire about the time the town was located. He was the founder of the town.

From early boyhood he was fond of hounds and during the fall and winter months he and his friends engaged in the sport of hunting. He was exuberantly happy when he listened to the baying of his hounds in the hills after a deer or fox, and he was generally present when the animal was captured.

In politics he was a Democrat, and his aim was to use his power to build up the party. During the campaign he worked with enthusiasm and his influence was great throughout the county. He was elected sheriff in 1876, and performed his official duties for the term of four years to the satisfaction of the people.

During the civil war he passed through many vicissitudes, which would make a volume if written up. In October, 1861, two straggling scouts who were passing along the public highway, made Garrett G. Long a prisoner and were taking him to headquarters. Parsons concluded to rescue his friend and he and two other men followed them and ordered the prisoner released. The scouts did not resist when they looked in the muzzle of the hunting rifles and saw the determined men behind them; but an enemy to southern sympathizers lost no time in reporting this disloyal act, and a force of men were sent from headquarters to wipe out those who were disloyal and destroy all of their property. Parsons was given the "tip" to gather up all his best stock and conceal them in the mountains; but soon the band of stock was discovered and driven out in the night to Grafton. Parsons and his friends were there on their arrival. They went to the headquarters of the commanding officer and stated the facts, and the officer believed in a high sense of justice and right; the horses were sent home and many more of the neighbors' horses with them. But the end was not yet in sight.

He was continually harrassed until the close of the war, but was generally successful.

He was liberal in the support of the church and all worthy undertakings for the advancement of the country. His hospitality was known among rich and poor, and to his friends a warm welcome was extended to come again.

When the town of Parsons was declared the county seat by the voice of the people, the St. George officials refused to deliver the records. Ward Parsons gathered those who endorsed his policy and went to St. George in the night. They gained entrance to the court house and returned with the "goods" and installed the new officials in the court house in Parsons, before sunrise. His followers were proud to inscribe their names on a banner carried by him; he always led them to victory.

His remains and those of his faithful wife are laid in Bethel cemetery. A beautiful monument has been erected by his son, but they had built a life monument which will stand through many generations.

SARAH ANN PARSONS
Daughter of William R. Parsons

SARAH ANN PARSONS.

Sarah Ann Parsons, eldest daughter of William R. and Catherine Ward Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe. When five years of age she lost her mother, which was a great misfortune to one of her loving nature.

She was educated by private tutors, and in school she worked with enthusiasm to solve the problems; and in after life she worked in the same manner. Each morning she was ready for a new day, and she never ceased to influence for good the community where she lived.

She united with the church when she was quite young and was a teacher in the Sunday school for many years.

She was tenderly cared for by her children in her last days. She bore her sufferings with Christian grace. The tribute of her life and memory must and ever will be a message of love, for she has reached a happy heaven and is waiting "Where the shadows of life cannot come."

Mary C. Parsons, fourth daughter of Solomon and Mary Ward Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. After her marriage she moved to Barbour County on a farm. She lived a very peaceful life and was very much beloved by all who knew her. She was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal church south.

She was a loyal woman to the south a short time before Lee's surrender; her husband was drafted in the U. S. A., but he hired a substitute and paid him seven hundred dollars. When the man arrived at Grafton, peace was declared and he was mustered out of service; she said her husband should not don a blue uniform for that amount.

Catherine Parsons' family record will appear in Jesse Parsons' record.

NANCY RUST PARSONS DANIELS.

Nancy R. Parsons, fourth daughter of William and Catherine Stoker Parsons, was born on the old home plantation in Randolph County, Virginia. She was an extremely small baby when she was ushered into this world, a quart cup fitted her nicely, but she grew rapidly for Virginia plantations did not produce stunted women, especially in this family; when she was married she weighed almost two hundred pounds. She spent all her life on a farm and was a woman of great courage and ambition; her fair name untarnished by word or deed will long survive her departure from active scenes of life, and as a beacon to the stranded sailor, serve to future generations as a guide of rectitude while on their journey down the turbulent stream of life.

MALINDA PARSONS BALL.

Malinda Parsons, sixth daughter of William and Caroline Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. She attended the district school and was considered a very intellectual and handsome young lady. After her marriage she migrated to Missouri, where her husband died and left her with five small children. She returned to her native state and taught school and supported her children. Her life was devoted to them and through her good management, they always had a comfortable home. She was a faithful mother, giving them her pure, loving, joyful service, and when the end came her storm-swept life was made glorious for time and eternity, for the life broken and used for others.

He was engaged in stock raising in Kansas for many years. When his two daughters passed away he was inconsolable and he tired of the west and returned to his native state in order to forget his sorrow. He resides in Beverly, West Virginia.

Hattie Ball, first daughter of John M. and Christina Ward Ball, was born in Randolph County, Virginia, and died at Colorado, Kansas. In childhood her parents moved to this place. She was a member of the M. E. Church, in which she lived faithfully until called from labor to reward. Her life was pure, and she was very much devoted to her parents and only sister. She was a great sufferer for two years and when shadows of death were falling, she addressed the members of her family with great tenderness. Her funeral sermon was preached from I Tim. 4:8, "For bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Her funeral was conducted by Rev. H. R. Gouldin, assisted by Rev. Robinson, of Lincoln Center charge. Many friends followed her body to her place of rest.

ISAAC PARSONS.

Isaac Parsons, second son of Thomas Parsons, Jr., was born in Hardy County, Virginia. After his marriage to Mary Mace, also of Hardy County, they moved into the wilderness with little of this world's goods, but they possessed the greatest of fortunes—health, strength and honesty. At that time luxuries were unknown; they did not have roads over which to travel; they loaded their goods on two-wheeled carts or pack horses; they did not have any varieties of wares to move—a few pewter utensils, a kettle, skillet, and cast iron pots, a kit of carpenter tools, and home-spun clothes formed about all they carried with them, except the children, generally five or six. The small ones rode in baskets slung on behind the mother; she carried one in her lap. Bed clothes were stuffed around the youngsters to make the baskets balance; the large ones rode horse-back and drove the cattle.

At night a fire was kindled and the meal was made of fried bacon and corn bread, baked in the skillet and the camp was made under the thick pine trees. After a peaceful sleep, they arose at the dawn of day and made a breakfast of ham and venison, corn bread and milk; coffee was not on the bill of fare. They then loaded on their goods and started on their journey, rejoicing, singing, joking and making merry. The woods rang with their joyous laughter as they traveled over the rocky path into the wilderness. I have no record of how long they were on the road to their new home. After they arrived on the land, the men all joined together and built cabins of rough logs with clap-board roofs. Sticks and clay were used for chimney. The roof was held on by logs thrown across; hickory pins were used for nails. A crane was hung in the fireplace to hold the pots and kettles when swung over the huge log fire.

Isaac Parsons was thrifty in more ways than one; his family steadily increased, and he built a two-story log house with stone chimneys, and soon his family were enjoying every comfort. His wife and daughters were expert spinners and weavers. They wove spreads and linen and made patch work quilts to furnish the house, which was considered a mansion in that day.

During the first years religious meetings were held in private houses. The people all met on the Sabbath day, and the most gifted man conducted the meeting and all joined in the singing. They were faithful worshippers of God.

Isaac Parsons was one of the founders of the Bethel Church; he and all his family were devoted Christians. The remains of himself and devoted wife are interred in the Bethel churchyard. The log church has fallen to decay and the stone foundation is all that remains to mark the spot of the first church built in the county.

Her sixth child was born the night she arrived in Oregon.

REBECCA PARSONS.

Rebecca Parsons, third daughter of Isaac Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia. Her life was devoted to her family; she was an excellent nurse, and spent much of her time among the sick; she gave her aged parents great love and care in their old days; she passed all of her life on the farm, where her father located when he came to West Virginia. She died unmarried at the age of eighty-three.

GEORGE M. PARSONS.

George M. Parsons, son of Isaac Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. He was engaged in farming and stock raising; his herds of cattle were the best in the community; he owned sixteen hundred acres of land. He died unmarried, leaving his estate to nieces and nephews. His life was one of truth and honesty.

CATHERINE PARSONS.

Catherine Parsons, fourth daughter of Isaac Parsons, married Townsend Bell; they moved to Kanawhat County, Virginia, and nothing is known of her descendants.

ELIZABETH PARSONS.

Elizabeth Parsons, fifth daughter of Isaac Parsons, was born on the plantation. She was very much beloved by every one who knew her. She was a sweet Christian character; her life was devoted in making those around her happy.

JEMIMA PARSONS.

Jemima Parsons, sixth daughter of Isaac Parsons, was a twin to Elizabeth, they were devoted companions from childhood; they were never absent from the house of the Lord on the sabbath day, if it was possible to be there. Both sleep near each other in the Bethel cemetery.

CHRISTINA PARSONS.

Christina Parsons, seventh daughter of Isaac Parsons, married William Ball, and nothing is known of her descendants.

JOHN H. AND WILLIAM J. PARSONS.

John H. and William J. Parsons, twin brothers and sons of Isaac Parsons, were born on the plantation. After their marriage they moved to Kanawha County, Virginia. All trace of their descendants is lost.

NANCY RUST PARSONS.

Nancy Rust Parsons, eighth daughter of Isaac and Mary Mace Parsons was born in Randolph County, Virginia. She grew to womanhood on the plantation and was an expert in the culinary art. The young folks were frequent visitors to this home and were always given a warm welcome. This family has all passed away many years ago.

NICHOLAS M. PARSONS.

Nicholas M. Parsons, son of Isaac Parsons, was born on the old plantation. He owned sixteen hundred acres of land and built a fine two-story house near the site of the loghouse, which was built in pioneer days. He inherited the love of fine stock, which is a characteristic of the Parsons family, his special attention being given to improving his herds, and his plantation produced fine specimens of cattle, horses and other domestic animals.

The most improved machinery was used in his fields and the appearance of thrift and industry was seen everywhere about his premises. The fruits of his orchard were of the best varieties.

He was a warm sympathizer of the south, and was very much annoyed during the civil war by guerrilla soldiers, and lost much property. He was assessed seven hundred dollars to make up Union men's losses. His sons inherited his lands at his death, but the most grand inheritance which he left his children was a name he had never dishonored.

EDWIN PARSONS, M. D.

Edwin Parsons was born in Randolph County, Virginia. He attended the private school at an early age and was a very studious young man; at the age of twenty he went to the medical department of the University of New York and graduated with high honors. He returned to his native state and located in Meadowville, where he built up a practice enjoyed by few physicians. As a man he had the respect of everyone and as a physician the people had implicit confidence in his ability and knowledge of the profession.

He was firm in what he believed to be right; his record was without a stain and his success but a just reward for his ability, industry and zeal in his chosen profession. He passed peacefully away in Meadowville, West Virginia.

GEORGE PARSONS.

George Parsons, third son of Thomas Parsons, Jr., was born in Hardy County, Virginia, and grew to manhood on the plantation. He was taught industry, which is the most important to one form in business and the man who succeeds in business is the one who retires before 10 o'clock and rises early in the morning. He must have been a man of pluck, energy and determination when he moved with his family to western Virginia and settled on Cheat river on land known as the "Job Farm." This country was unknown to civilized man until 1762. When he located there all the land from the mouth of Horse Shoe Run to Holly Meadows was in the possession of the four Parsons brothers. They formed a little detached world, purely their own, and all difficulties and obstacles were forced to yield before them in whatever direction they turned their hands.

The soil was very fertile. Much of it was covered with hickory, walnut, chestnut, oak and sugar maple. The broad acres were converted into cornfields and meadows and their herds of live stock roamed through the vast forests at will.

They all lived in log cabins, but they later built comfortable log houses and were prosperous. The first Parsons laid in the Bethel cemetery was a little son of George Parsons that was killed by a falling branch from a tree where he had gone to shelter from a storm.

In the spring of 1815, he sold his plantation to his brother William, and with his wife and thirteen children journeyed westward, all the cousins who could ride horseback, accompanying them as far as the Ohio river. They were so attached to each other that the parting was pathetic. Many of them never met again.

He settled in Montgomery County, Ohio, purchased two hundred and fifty acres of land in the Miami Valley, seven miles from Dayton and engaged in the stock business, raising cattle, buying and selling. Work was his pleasure and he was seldom off his horse from dawn until the shades of night. He was a shrewd business man and he accumulated wealth.

As a citizen he had a clean moral standing. He attained a place of dignity and held it by righteous living and his kindness to all mankind.

His first wife was Nancy Scott. Eight daughters and seven sons were born to them. She died when the youngest daughter was two years of age. Two daughters and three sons died unmarried; the others settled in Ohio, Indiana, Missouri and Illinois. The names of the three last wives are not given. There were no children by them. The fourth wife survived him. He retired from business at the age of 75 years. His years were full. He died in his 93rd year.

Home, No. 65 Kenton street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Walnut Hills, Ohio, August 10, 1894.

(By Elizabeth Parsons Howell—Written in her eighty-sixth year.)

I, Elizabeth Parsons Howell, daughter of George and Nancy Scott Parsons, was born on the bank of Cheat river, Virginia, November 21, 1810, and migrated to Ohio with my parents in 1815. At the present writing, I am the only one of my father's family in Ohio. I have two sisters, Nancy E. Shepard of Chicago, and Margaret McDonald, of Oregon.

Formerly I have been in the habit of visiting the Ohio home of my youth every year, but it has been several years since I was there. I have a desire to go once more if I am spared, but we cannot tell about these things at my age. I always desired to go to Virginia and see the place where I was born. Six years ago I went and had a lovely four weeks' visit, and met a great many of my friends, among them persons of three generations. I was on the first mountain I ever remembered seeing and in the house where I was born. It had gone out of the possession of my kindred. A Presbyterian minister had purchased the property.

My husband and I had it all planned to go to Virginia to meet our many religious friends who had frequently visited us in this city. We had, we thought, it all arranged in 1874, but the good Lord had it arranged otherwise. My husband died in that year. I still felt a desire to go but there was always something to hinder me, and my visit was deferred until six years ago. I spent four weeks pleasantly in Philadelphia, New York and Brooklyn and was well all the time.

I went as much to fulfill my husband's desire as my own. I attended all the yearly meetings, came home well and was always glad I made the visit. I will now give a short history of my married life:

I married Joshpa Howell, May, 1833, and three months after we were married we moved to Wayne County, Indiana, to a small village named Haggerstown, sixteen miles from Richmond and seven miles from Cambridge City. We were one of the seven newly married couples that started the village. Wm. Baker and wife kept a hotel; David Platts kept a cabinet-maker shop; Henry Harris kept a blacksmith shop; David Weaver, a wagon maker's shop and Jackson Hawkins a nice little store. My husband kept a tailor shop and I a milliner store on a small scale. Thos J. Buchanan was our physician. We all got along nicely, none of us had anything but what we got by our own work and we appreciated it all the more.

In one year there were twenty houses in the village. When we where there three months, we bought lots, and Enos, Boyd & Luce, our carpenter, built us a nice five-room two story house, when we had been there seven months, we were in our nicely furnished house. In about one year, M. E. Reeves came and started a large store. He bought and sold grain. Gillispie & Davis, of Dayton, Ohio, built a large mill, and everything went on lively. It was a fine, healthy fruit and grain country. We had four children born to us, one died in infancy. Martha, Harvey, and Thomas. The schools were very good and we got along nicely. The town grew to be quite large. We sold our first house and built a seven room house on two lots in the central part of town. We built to stay. We improved and had every convenience—a nice orchard, grape arbor, bee house, etc.

I have never been situated as comfortably since, and lived so happily. My husband's health failed, and he could not stand the confinement of his shop. Our doctor said he would have to engage in some business where he could be on his feet, but we both felt that we could not leave our nice home, where we had so many comforts and staid old friends, but duty seemed to say, seek another place, and so the city of Cincinnati was the only place we thought he could find business. We had to sacrifice quite a sum and many comforts in selling our home. We made a sale, selling most of our household goods and moved to Cincinnati, March 28, 1848. It was like a funeral to us to leave all our friends, but it seemed the best.

My husband got a situation soon at Mack Brothers, where he stayed seven years, and regained his health. Then he was offered more money and he took a position with A. & J. Trounstines, where he got $100.00 per month. Our daughter married Lorenzo Brown, 1853, and moved to the country. My husband was always desirous to own a farm, as our sons wanted to work on a farm. He bought a farm ten miles from the city, near Mt. Pleasant, and with my two sons I went on the farm, my husband staying in the city and coming home every week. We got along very nicely and did well, raised good crops and planted fruit of various kinds. We had the farm stocked with the best cows and horses. We lived there thirteen years, but it was our lot to have another break-up. In 1861, my two sons and son-in-law enlisted and went to the war, and I could do no more. I made a sale, and sold all our cows, horses, wagons and all the farming implements and moved to the city. I took my daughter and her child home and kept them during the war. Her children were all dead but that one. There were three years of anxiety—we did not know what day or week would bring to us, but that was not all. They did not all come home—we lost our baby son, Thomas. He was killed in battle at Atlanta. That was a very sore trial to us, but my trials have been more since. In 1874, I buried my husband and in 1876, buried my son-in-law, Lorenzo Brown. My daughter lived a widow for five years and then married Dr. James R. Whittemore in 1880, and on January 22, 1892, he died. On December 27, 1893, she followed him. All these many trials I have passed through and yet I am kept here while many others are gone that might be of much more use than I.

Eleven years ago I sold my home at 237 West 9th street, between John and Central avenue, and came to my present home, Walnut Hills, where I have had very good health, and am still wading along through life and have great reason to be thankful that I am still able to take care of my house in a plain manner.

I have been a member of the Mill Creek Baptist church for thirty years. My husband was deacon there twenty-five years, but we are all at Spring Grove now. I have one son left, one grand-son, Howell Brown, who has a wife and three children, great-grand-children, Eliza Brown, Lorenzo Brown and Mattie Whittemore Brown.

Mrs. Howell died in 1902. She was 92 years of age. Her son, Harvey Howell, of Cincinnati, was kind enough to send the article written by Mrs. Howell. He resides in Cincinnati and is 75 years of age. The grand-son, Howell Brown, resides in Kentucky.

The "Job Farm" was purchased by Newton Swisher, who married Mary S. Parsons, and was in his possession when Mrs. Howell visited Virginia. The house where she was born was burned in 1823, and was rebuilt by Job Parsons, S., on the same foundation. The property was purchased in 1909 by Westley Pifer, who married C. Parsons, and is still in possession of the "kindred." The farm has been kept up and many of the old apple trees are bearing fruit; perhaps they were planted by George Parsons more than one hundred years ago.

HOWELL L. BROWN.

Howell L. Brown, son of Lorenzo and Martha Howell Brown, was born on a farm in Springfield township, near Cincinnati, Ohio. He received his education in the public schools. He is a typesetter in a printing office in Dayton, Kentucky.

MARGARET PARSONS ULM

Daughter of George Parsons

MARGARET PARSONS ULM.

Margaret Parsons, daughter of George and Nancy Scott Parsons, was born in Miami valley near Dayton, Ohio. She was the fifteenth child born to George Parsons. Her mother died when she was quite young and the eldest sister was a mother to her.

After her marriage she migrated to Missouri and lived there until May 1864. She and her family crossed the plains with an Ox team with an emigrant train arriving in Marion County, Oregon, the 25th day of September. Her husband passed away in the same month, and she was alone in a strange land with a family, but she had made many friends on her way to Oregon and they were very kind and assisted her in getting settled in a cosy home where she remained until May, 1870, when she moved to Forest Grove and engaged in farming and stock raising. She was a woman of great intelligence and a good financier. Her second husband was Davis McDonald; her third, Miller, a Mexican war veteran. After his death, she drew a pension. She and her son spent the winter of 1899 in California. She was then in her 81st year, and had all her faculties perfectly, she enjoying telling of her pioneer life in the west. Her last days were spent with her son at her home in Dilley, Oregon.

JAMES PARSONS.

James Parsons, fourth son of Thomas Parsons, Jr. I., was born seven miles from Moorfield, Virginia, on a plantation which was bounded on one side by the South Branch of the Potomac, a clear stream that moved silently and slowly in the summer. The shores are shaded by sycamore, walnut and pawpaw trees. This land has been in the Parsons family before the revolution and is exceedingly fertile. It produces vegetation in the greatest abundance.

In the summer the fields of corn and meadows of new mown hay present a beautiful appearance to the extreme. The hills seem to roll away in undulation from the valley, and beyond the Alleghany mountains loom up as if trying to gaze on the beauties of the surrounding country.

Here James Parsons grew to manhood and received a practical education from private schools. He chose farming as his occupation. His father had pre-empted a large tract of land in the western part of the state, and after his marriage a new field of adventure was open to him on this land.

The Indians had not molested the settlers since 1781. I have no knowledge of how many there were in the party when Parsons migrated to West Virginia in the spring of 1800. They traveled down Luney's Creek from the South Branch, through Greenland Gap, a deep cut in the mountain. The massive yellow rocks rise up on each side, a steep ascent which leads to the summit of the mountain. Here the spectator's eyes dwell with wonder at the view of the surrounding country; the river shimmers with its bright water in the glow of the sunlight, far down below—a greater scene of wildness, grandeur and sublimity is not easily found.

The beaten path leads on through this unbroken forest of chestnut groves, hickory, oak and sugar maple trees. Along the way clear cool water bubbled down from springs; a gourd hangs on a broken twig, that thirsty traveler might drink from these tinkling springs.

After about four days' journey they arrived to take possession of the cabin that had been built some time before. At this time all the agricultural lands from the Holly Meadows to St. George was in possession of the Parsons family.

Here, on this place, he burned bricks which were used for a foundation and chimneys for the two-story hewed log house which is still intact on this homestead.

The negro woman who saw "Sims" shot by the Indians was purchased by him and spent all her life on the plantation. She was the mother of fifteen children.

James Parsons was a jolly good fellow, and enjoyed a joke. He would tear a leaky roof from a neighbor's cabin some dark night and gather his friends the following day and put on a new roof. He possessed good business qualities and assisted his children when they were in need. He purchased a tract of land in the Horse Shoe from Isaac Parsons, son of Captain James. This land he gave to his eldest son, William R. Parsons; the home plantation to Andrew B., and another tract to Thomas S., and to Abraham, he gave a tract of land where East Parsons is now located.

He lived to see his children all settled in homes of their own. He was generally known as "Uncle Jim," and his wife as "Aunt Nancy." She was an expert spinner. She spun the wrap of her wedding dress. It was so fine she drew it through a thimble. At eighty years of age she could do fine needle work without glasses. She was a very intellectual woman and was born in Lowdon County, Virginia.

Here, on this plantation, they lived and flourished and the pleasures of life were sweet to them. They saw nine sons bring home their brides and the daughters and two granddaughters went away happy brides.

The youngest son, Thomas S., was given a grand reception. It was the custom in those days to race for the bottle. The man with the fleetest horse would get the bottle with a white ribbon tied to it and it was presented to the bride. The bottle with the blue ribbon was presented to the groom and then the whole bridal party drank their health and prosperity.

Only the chimney of the negro cabin marks the spot where they sang melodious songs, and all the busy scenes of gaiety which have taken place are gone. No more are there loud yells in response to the dinner bell. With the swift revolving of years, the greatness and pride and glory of two generations have passed away; and it is a solemn lecture on the shortness of our earthly existence that it reminds us that the sun that shines so brightly on the graves of our ancestors will shine with equal brightness on ours, and in a few more years the third and fourth generation will sink into silence, but the Parsons name will go on until the earth and all its work shall be burned up, for they are a prolific race.

WILLIAM R. PARSONS.

William Rust Parsons, first son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia. When he was two years of age his parents migrated to western Virginia. His boyhood days were spent on the plantation. He received his education from the private schools and was a man of sound scholarship and noted for his devotion to books. He could hold a conversation with the best on the general topics of the day. He had a keen knowledge of men and seemed to have learned the value of self-control. When a person did him an injury, he guarded his words and said as little as possible. He kept his dignity and ignored them, which was a greater reprimand than strong language. By his gracious, kindly manner, he made a fine impression which won great respect from everyone.

In politics he was a Democrat, but few knew his opinion of the candidate of the opposite party. He was elected to several offices and performed his official duties with honor and was always first to extend his assistance for development and improvement for the public good. He was always willing to help a man when he was unfortunate. His idea was that a man who was tempted and did not fall achieved no greater victory than the man who fell and rose again.

During the civil war he was a heavy loser. His assessment by Kellok was $800.00. The order read: You are hereby notified that upon an assessment, you are assessed $800.00 to make good the losses of Union men. If you fail to pay in three days, your property will all be confiscated, your house burned and yourself shot.

By order of Brigadier General Millroy; Captain Kellok, Commanding 123rd Ohio.

He informed the officer that it was impossible for him to pay the amount, he "could only die but once." This tyrannous proceeding raised a storm of indignation and Jos. A. Faris was sent to St. George to stop the assessment, but not until many citizens had paid over large sums. Had this work gone on it would have been hard to tell what would have been the outcome.

After emancipation was declared, W. R. Parsons called his slaves together and offered them the same home that they had always enjoyed, but they were anxious to see some of "de wurld" and they all packed up and left their "happy home" for some other country.

Captain James Parsons, son of Isaac, inherited the Horse Shoe land and sold it to James Parsons, who made a gift deed to his son William, who built the house which is now on it. There is no spot on Cheat river so beautiful. In the fall when the sunshine shows full upon the high colors of the landscape, as it stretches over the Horse Shoe bottom and Cheat river winding along in the distance, it is most picturesque.

The different crossings of Cheat river have been given various names; Job's Ford, at the Holly Meadows, got its name from Job Parsons, who lived on the north bank below this ford. The river sweeps around the base of the mountain, then turns toward the east to Neveill's Ford. From Sim's Bottom, the river flows around the Horse Shoe, a distance of six miles. The Horse Shoe is named from the resemblance to the Shoe of a horse from cork to cork and is one mile across.

William R. Parsons owned a large tract of land in what is known as the "Sugar Lands." This land was covered with black maple sugar trees and other valuable timber. He used this land for grazing purposes for cattle, horses and mules. He retired from business and lived a quiet life some years before he passed away. He did not fear death, but welcomed it with the great heartiness of his nature.

In the spring of 1867 he embarked for California. He settled in Salinas valley and engaged in farming and had his career not been cut short, he would have succeeded. His genial disposition won for him many friends, but fate was against him; he contracted a severe cold which proved fatal. and died in San Jose, February, 1870.

She returned to her family and passed away in a few months.

The careful training of her children and her influence on those who were her associations stands today as a great monument to her sweet memory.

ELIZABETH PARSONS HANK.

"The old log house stands in silence grand—
 A monument to home life sweet.
 With untold tales of by-gone days,
 Of pleasant paths or thorny ways;
 A land mark, only, in time's hand,
 When never more its owner shall greet."

Elizabeth Parsons, fifth daughter of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia. She was an infant when her parents moved to Western Virginia. She attended the district school and finished her educational course at Morgantown Academy. She was a type of a very handsome woman, dark lustrous eyes with soft sunny hair. Among the "darkies" on the plantation Miss "Betties" word was good, for they all loved her for her sweet Christian character. After her marriage she lived in Monroe County, Virginia. Her children filled her life with constant care; she looked after them from the cradle, she gave them religious instructions and they were devoted to her. She migrated to Ohio 1836 and some years later was taken from her family. Her children lost a loving mother and the community lost a noble woman. We know the world was better for her having lived in it. The old log house where she was reared is still intact.

GEORGE HANK

George Hank, first son of David and Elizabeth Parsons Hank, was born on the plantation of his grandfather James Parsons, in Randolph County, Virginia. He received the most of his education in Ohio. He was in his twentieth year when he lost his mother, at the age to realize what a dreadful loss he had sustained, for a child can never have any one who can take the place of a loving mother. At the beginning of the civil war he enlisted in the U. S. army and went south with his company. He was taken prisoner and confined in the Andersonville prison, where he died May, 1864, leaving a wife and five sons to mourn the loss of a kind husband and a loving father. After the close of the war she moved to Missouri and settled on unimproved prairie land and through her industry and that of her sons they were able to live comfortable; in all ways she was a most estimable woman and loved by all who knew her.

James Hank, second son of David and Elizabeth Parsons Hank, was born in Randolph County Virginia. He passed his early youth in Monroe County, Virginia. He accompanied his parents to Ohio; they traveled from the home of his mother in Randolph County (Now Tucker County, West Virginia), in road wagons. They settled in Gallia County, where he grew to manhood. He moved to Holden, Missouri, 1882, and remained there until 1892, when he moved to Kansas City. He was a generous and a social man, a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and was never absent from the church when it was possible for him to be there. He was a man any one might feel proud to clasp in friendship.

JOHN B. HANK.

John B. Hank, third son of David and Elizabeth Parsons Hank, was born in Virginia. He was a small boy when his parents moved from Virginia to Ohio, where he grew to manhood and was educated in the public schools. He migrated to California, crossing the plains with an ox team. He staid in the Golden state ten years. A spirit of unrest took possession of him to see his old home in Ohio. By patient industry he had been successful and he located in Johnson County, Missouri; he bought land and built a fine house and for many years enjoyed entertaining his many friends, but age begun to creep on and he retired from active business and now resides in Holden, Missouri.

JOHN PARSONS HANK.

John P. Hank, fourth son of David and Elizabeth Parsons Hank, was born in Virginia. He was reared in the state of Ohio. When the civil war was declared, he was one of the first to take up arms in the defense of his country's rights; he volunteered in Company C, 41st Illinois Regiment. He did service under General McPherson, and was mustered out of service September, 1864. He is now living near Holden, Missouri.

CALEB ROBERT HANK.

Caleb R. Hank, fifth son of David and Elizabeth Parsons Hank, was born in Monroe County, Virginia. He was educated in the public schools in Ohio. When he reached the years of maturity he crossed the plains with his brother, driving an ox team. He worked in the mines for several years and his investments proved successful. He tired of a miner's life and returned to his home in Ohio in 1869; from there he visited West Virginia, the home of his mother, and spent two months with his relatives. He then decided to locate in Missouri; but he was better pleased with pioneer life; he pulled up stakes and went to Nevada, where he engaged in the stock business, was one of the largest cattle raisers in the state.

He is now near Thermopolis, Wyoming, stock raising. His horses are shipped to all parts of the world. He, with his wife and daughter, Edith, attended the Parsons reunion in West Virginia, 1911, and had a very pleasant trip. On their return home they visited his old home in Ohio, and spent a month with his brothers and sisters in Holden, Missouri.

JENNIE S. HANK.

Jennie S. Hank, second daughter of Caleb R. and America Brown Hank, was born in Idaho, but spent most of her girlhood days in Ogden, Utah; she went from there with her parents to Thermopolis, Wyoming, where she followed her chosen profession as teacher in the city schools for many years. She was overcome by nervous break down and resigned her position, thinking that a change would be beneficial. She went east; after her return she was able to be up and out of doors and all were in good spirits, believing that her full recovery was only a matter of time. But diabetes with complications was too great a strain on her weakened system and she passed away, surrounded by her loving parents, sisters and brothers.

No person in the community was held in higher esteem. The high standard of life to which she aspired and attained; her strong, upright womanhood, her studious habits and many excellent qualities of head and heart, her quiet and unostentatious, yet frank and friendly disposition, her unselfish devotion to duty and to those who were near and dear to her, marked her as a character whom all must honor. Her close devotion to her work and to study, to which she was ardently devoted, sapped her strength and left her a victim to the Great Conqueror.

“Weep not that her toil is over;
Weep not that her race is run.
God grant that we may rest as sweetly
When, like hers, our work is done.”

SARAH ELIZABETH HANK.

Sarah E. Hank, third daughter of David and Elizabeth Parsons Hank, was born in Gallia County, Ohio. She was educated in the public schools, graduating when she was quite young. She was engaged in teaching for some years. When her brother returned from California, and located in Missouri, she made her home with him.

She visited California in 1881, and spent the summer with her relatives; she visited all places of interest, Pacific Grove, California's New Port, and San Francisco, the city of many nations. On her way home she spent some time at her brother's ranch in Nevada. Any one who has visited her in her home can truly say she entertains in the great Southern style, an art she inherited.

GEORGE PARSONS.

George Parsons, second soon of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the old homestead in Randolph County, Virginia. The house stands on the hill overlooking the river bottom lands, in the garden bloomed the old fashioned flowers of every variety; the scenery made a picture which would delight the eye of an artist. Cheat River flowing over her rocky bed, the banks fringed to the water's edge on both sides of the river, with green foliage, the sloping hills clothed with verdure in summer, in autumn the leaves were every color of the rainbow.

Here George Parsons grew to manhood amid the busy scenes of life. At four o'clock in the morning the inmates of this household were astir, the spinning wheels were put in motion, the looms were turning out webs of cloth to be converted into clothing for the army of workers on the plantation. At noon the "black mamma," with her head bound around with a red bandana handkerchief, tooted the horn for dinner; the workers in the fields responded with loud yells; they scented the corn beef, cabbage, sweet corn pone with fresh buttermilk, which was their delight. In the evening the "darkies" sang melodious songs with their friends from adjoining plantations.

After George Parsons' marriage he moved to Clover Run, on a tract of land covered with timber; he cleared the land and built a comfortable house, and was cosily situated. His children began to desire new fields; he concluded to move to Iowa and settle them around him. In October, 1853, he sold all his possessions in Virginia and moved to Jasper County, Iowa, and build up another home; but fate was against him; he was stricken with fever November 20th, 1855, and passed away, leaving his faithful wife to bear the burden of life alone. She was very devoted to her children.

ALMARINE PARSONS HOLLEN.

Almarine Parsons, first daughter of George and Susannah Harper Parsons, was born on the banks of Clover Run, in Randolph County, Virginia. All of her youthful days were spent in this beautiful little valley, surrounded with all home comforts. She completed her education at Morgantown, Virginia (now West Virginia), and taught many terms of the home schools. Soon after her marriage to Edwin N. Hollen they migrated to Jasper County, Iowa, and settled on a farm, where they continued to live for many years.

She made several trips to her Virginia home, and enjoyed going over the place where she had spent her girlhood days. She cared for her mother in her declining years. She was a sweet Christian character and a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for more than fifty years.

EMALINE PARSONS GOSSLEE.

Emaline Parsons, second daughter of George and Susannah Harper Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. All of her girlhood days were spent on the farm on Clover Run. Her education was completed at Morgantown, Virginia. She was a very popular young lady among her student friends. Many parties were given in her honor before she migrated to her Western home.

After her marriage to Dr. V. D. F. Gosslee, they moved to Nebraska, and neither lived but a short time. They had two children; one died soon after the parents, the other was reared by his grandmother Parsons. He died in 1898, unmarried.

MARION PARSONS.

Marion Parsons, first son of George and Susannah Harper Parsons, was born on the farm in Clover Run Valley, Virginia. When in his eighteenth year, he started out in the world to make his fortune. He crossed the plains to California with a herd of sheep in company of his uncle, Ezekiel Harper. They arrived in the Golden State in the fall, having made a successful trip.

He engaged in the nursery business in Santa Cruz for some time. In 1856 he returned to his native state and spent the winter with relatives and friends. He visited his mother in Iowa before his return to California.

He was engaged in the lumber business in Lexington, California, when he was injured by lumber falling upon him. He passed away soon after the accident, leaving a wife and little daughter. His remains were laid to rest in Lexington, California.

JEROME HARPER PARSONS.

Jerome H. Parsons, second son of George and Susannah Harper Parsons, was born on the banks of Clover Run, in Randolph County, Virginia. When he made his debut upon the stage of life, the proverbial silver spoon was not in his mouth, nor was there about his cradle any environments of splendor or luxury. He was laid in the little white bed by the "black mamma" and it was up to him to work out the problem of life, which he has bravely done.

Very early in life he was taught the valuable lesson of industry, which is essential to a man who has to carve out his own fortune. The outside world was a blank to him; he knew nothing of the commotion and the bustle in the cities, but the spirit of unrest was with him for adventure was a characteristic of the family; the little valley was too monotonous for him and he longed for the West.

In the fall of 1853 he and all of his father's family migrated to Iowa, but like "Sambo" after the Emancipation, he wanted to see more "ub de wurd," and he roamed around over Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska. In the spring of 1857 he crossed the plains with an ox team in the company of emigrants, to California, arriving in Sacramento July 4th, with a capital of five cents. He soon obtained work in a blacksmith shop until he located his brother, Marion, and they engaged in the lumber business at Lexington.

In the fall of 1863 he went to Caribou, B. C., to his uncles, the Harper brothers, who were mining and supplying all that country with beef. He made trips to California and Oregon, buying the cattle and driving them overland to British Columbia.

In the spring of 1872, he settled on a stock ranch in Eastern Oregon and raised cattle and horses for the San Francisco market. He has a comfortable home and is enjoying the fruits of his labor with the ever returning consciousness that the hardships endured while seeking wealth are now filling his declining years with all the pleasures of life.

He spent the winters of 1911 and 1912 in California, where he met many of his boyhood friends. He attended the Parsons reunion at Golden Gate Park and enjoyed the occasion as much as the younger generation.

He is a staunch Democrat and his joy knew no bounds when Woodrow Wilson was elected.

GERALDINE PARSONS MENDENHALL.

Geraldine Parsons, third daughter of George and Susannah Harper Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia (now West Virginia). She was of an independent nature, but her courteous and graceful manner won for her many friends. She was an exceedingly pretty girl, and many hearts were made sad among her relatives and friends when she said farewell to them to make her home in Iowa.

After her marriage she moved to Montana. She was the mother of ten children, but I have been unable to trace any of her family. She died in 1906.

TIMARANDA PARSONS BANKS.

Timaranda Parsons Banks, fourth daughter of George and Susannah H. Parsons, was born in Virginia, and migrated to Iowa with her parents in 1853. After her marriage she moved to Snicartie, Illinois, where she died in 1881, leaving a family of which nothing is known.

HESS D. PARSONS.

Hess D. Parsons, third son of George and Susannah Parsons, was born in Virginia, in 1853. He migrated to Iowa with his parents. When a young man he bought a farm and engaged in stock raising. He still lives on this farm, which is near Newton, Iowa.

GEORGE W. PARSONS.

George W. Parsons, fourth son of George and Susannah Parsons, was born on the old homstead in Randolph County, Virginia. He accompanied his parents to Iowa in 1853, and was brought up on the farm. For many years he was dealing in stock, buying and selling in the Chicago market. He is now an inventor, and owns one of the largest foundrys in Newton, and is doing an extensive business. His invention for a self feeder to a threshing machine, is a grand success.

He attended the Parsons reunion in West Virginia, August, 1899, and made an address to those who assembled annually to honor their ancestors. He visited the Clover Run farm, but very little is left to mark the spot where gay throngs gathered to make merry many years ago. Only three of this family are living.

NEWMAN LEONIDAS PARSONS.

Newman L. Parsons, fourth son of George and Susannah Harper Parsons, was born on the home farm in Malika township, Iowa, and lived all his life in Jasper County. He was an infant at the time of his father's death, and was reared on the farm; the loving mother devoted her life to the welfare of her children. He was a very energetic man and successful in business.

He was hauling hay, the doubletree broke, and it was supposed he lost his balance; he fell to the ground and was killed. He was a member of the M. E. church for many years. His home was an ideal happy one. The funeral was attended by the many friends; the casket was banked with many beautiful flowers, the tribute of those who held the one sleeping there in high esteem and who thus expressed their sympathy with the sorrowing family.

DAVID PARSONS.

David Parsons, third son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the home plantation and all of his days were spent on the home place, but a few months. He was a man who grasped every opportunity to make himself a useful citizen. All of his time was improved in mechanical work; he had the ability to have become an inventor.

His career was cut short by an accident which occurred when he was felling a tree on what is known now as the Blackman farm. He was struck by a branch of the tree which proved fatal in a few hours. He had everything to live for, bright prospects for the future, a beautiful young wife, and baby girl. His descendants are numerous; all of them reside in West Virginia.

LUCINDA PARSONS LONG.

p. 30

Lucinda Parsons, first daughter of David and Edith Taggart Parsons, was born near the home of her father on the plantation. The greater part of her girlhood days were spent with her grand parents. From their home she went to the Holly Meadows, a happy bride.

She is a remarkable woman, endowed with great ambition and possessed of an iron constitution. In her early married life she would take two children on horseback and go to mill with what was known as a grist, that was 120 pounds of wheat, have it ground and return to her home and prepare the noon meal for the farm hands.

She is an expert spinner with wool or flax, and she has woven many yards of cloth, bed spreads and blankets. During the civil war she clothed her children from cloth woven by her hands.

She enjoys the company of young people, and attends all the Parsons reunions.

Merrily she sang, a lullaby song
When she wove the many frocks;
And rocked the cradle with a smile,
While she knitted the little socks.

The great men of our nation
Were reared by mothers of her kind.
May God give us more of the same,
That our country may not fall behind.

JOHN R. PARSONS.

John R. Parsons, fourth son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. After his marriage he built a log house in the Horse Shoe and lived there ten years.

In the spring of 1837 he and family and several other families made up a wagon train and migrated to Jefferson County, Iowa. He settled on a large tract of land and built a cabin. But later he built a brick house, which is still intact. He engaged in the stock business and was prosperous. Quite a village sprang up around him, called Parsonsville.

He was a Democrat in politics and held a number of public offices. When Buchanan Township was organized he was the first Justice of the Peace, an office he held for ten years. He was also a member of the jury at the first regular term of court held in the county.

When his children were married, he purchased land and settled them around him. He was a devoted father and a highly esteemed citizen. He was very hospitable; his home was open to rich and poor alike. He left an influence that will continue to bless the human race.

DIANA PARSONS.

Diana Parsons, daughter of Dr. Solomon Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe. She married John R. Parsons, and together, in the state of Iowa, endured hardships of pioneer life, and enjoyed happiness and prosperity. She was fond of children. Though the mother of thirteen, she said "there was still room in her heart for more; she did not have too many."

She was well read on medicine, and for years was the only doctor in the community. She was very successful in maternity cases, which was her specialty.

She could tell many interesting stories of her pioneer days. The Indian village was not far from where she lived, and she and her husband called one afternoon to see their mode of living. The cook was boiling corn and a big turtle together. A pressing invitation was given them to take dinner, but they excused themselves and got away without insulting the red men.

She made many visits to Virginia to visit her many friends and her father and mother. A warm welcome was always given her by every one. She passed away very suddenly at the home of her son, while visiting him.

Eugene Parsons, second son of John R. and Diana Parsons, was born in Virginia, and accompanied his father and mother to Iowa at the age of five years.

When he reached his 18th year, he journeyed across the plains with an emigrant train, driving an ox team. He settled near Redding, California. ROBERT SLACK PARSONS.

Robert S. Parsons, fifth son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the homestead in Randolph County, Virginia. Great joy was in the household when the news was spread that two sons had been born within three hours of each other. They grew to manhood together and were inseparable companions. They ate from the same dish, drank from the same cup, and married sisters. The whole countryside attended their wedding and to enjoy the festivities of the occasion. The following day they all betook themselves to the home of the groom and continued the frolic for several days. He and his young bride began life together with good health and the best wishes of their friends.

One year of supreme happiness and the life of the young wife went out into the unknown future, leaving him an infant son. But time would never brush away the bloom of that sweet, blissful year of happiness; it would always cling to his heart.

Two years later he married the daughter of Thomas Parsons and migrated to Jefferson County, Iowa. He settled on a tract of land and engaged in farming and stock raising and by his obliging disposition he won the esteem of his fellow man. The son by the first wife grew to manhood and died in Colorado in 1867, unmarried. His descendants are eighty-four. Two sons and two daughters are all that are living of his fifteen children; they reside in Iowa.

Son of James Parsons

ABRAHAM PARSONS.

Abraham Parsons, sixth son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the old homestead in Randolph County, Virginia. After he grew to manhood his father placed him in charge of the plantation, and managing of the negroes. He lived on the plantation ten years after his marriage; six children were born to this couple on the homestead.

In the spring of 1844 his father gave him a farm on the east side of Shaffers Fork, where Parsons is now located. He moved there and built a grist mill and a saw mill, which the flood carried away in 1857, and in 1859 he built the mill that is now there, but not on the present location. On this farm he raised fine herds of cattle, and his horses were among the best in the county. He was a great sportsman, very fond of hunting with hounds, and always kept eight or ten fine fox hounds. His home was open to all of his friends, and during the hunting season many sportsmen came from different parts of the state.

He was a Democrat and voted for secession in 1861. After war was declared he remained at home and attended to his business, Union neighbors soon reported him as not loyal to the government and a company of soldiers came and destroyed all they could of the mill and carried him to Beverly a prisoner, making him walk the thirty miles while they rode his horses. He was thrown in jail without bed or blankets, and the weather was cold and frosty. He paid a boy 25 cents to carry a note to his cousin, Mary E. Buckley; she came with a blanket and a heavy sheep skin, and a good warm supper. He lay there three weeks and he was carried to Camp Chase, Ohio, a place that was a rival to Andersonville (which has been spoken of so much in history). After three months his son got his release by a petition to the Governor, which had to be signed by all the loyal men. His wife did not recognize him when he returned, he was such a wreck from starvation; the sheepskin and blanket saved him from great suffering. His health was so impaired he was always a great sufferer after this; but his brave spirit was not broken. Some time after his riding horse was hitched to the fence at the old home plantation, and a member of the "Swamp Dragons company" thought he would secure a good horse, so he leaped in the saddle and rode away. Parsons siezed an old rifle and fired at him; the man soon abandoned the horse and concluded walking was good. No one suffered more losses; he was continually harassed until the close of the war.

After living on his plantation for 28 years, he concluded to sell it and migrate to California to benefit his health. Eighteen of his family left West Virginia for the Golden State in November, 1872. He settled in Gonzales and engaged in farming and stock raising. He gathered a host of friends around him, because he was affable and true, generous to all, and was familiarly known as Grandpa Parsons. He celebrated his golden wedding February 12, 1884; all his children were present to enjoy the event, but three. His family had increased to sixty children, grand children and great grand children. He was the only member of his family of nine sons and two daughters that celebrated their fiftieth anniversary. Six months later he passed peacefully away. He had no regrets for the past and no fear for the future. The deeds of a good man are never forgotten. His remains lie in the Gonzales cemetery, and besides him his estimable wife, who walked through life with him. She was a sweet, Christian character, and was loved by all for her many deeds of kindness. Her hand was ever ready to help those in need; she was a devoted mother, and her name will not be forgotten for many generations.

WASHINGTON PARSONS.

Washington Parsons was born on the old Parsons plantation in Randolph County, Virginia. He was ten years of age when his parents moved to what is now East Parsons. After his marriage he moved on the farm where the battle of Corrick's Ford was fought July 13, 1861; with his wife and four children they fled over the mountains to Hadax Creek, while the shot and shell were whistling o'er their heads, a cannon ball cut a limb from a tree near by. His house was converted into a hospital, and all their household goods carried away. On his return a big negro was walking around wearing Parsons' wedding suit. He did not dare ask the darky to disrobe, as it would have been considered disloyal. They were fortunate to escape with a roof to cover their heads. Mrs. Parsons searched the camps near Beverly for her horse which had been stolen; on her return home some straggling soldiers killed her turkey hen and were carrying it away; she leaped the fence and captured the bird by a hard fought battle; one soldier said, "another battle won by a rebel."

He and family migrated to California with the Parsons clan in 1872, and he settled in Monterey County. He has killed more deer than any other Parsons. He has a bee ranch and in 1907 he sold twenty-one hundred pounds of honey.

November 13, 1906, he celebrated his Golden Wedding; all of his children were present and sixteen grand children. He is the only one of five brothers who has celebrated this happy event. He was the recipient of many costly presents, and two hundred dollars in gold coin. His friends all enjoyed the occasion immensely; one hundred and fifty people "broke bread" with them and wished them many returns of the day. Both are hale and hearty and may celebrate their diamond wedding.

JEDSON PARSONS.

Jedson Parsons, second son of Abraham and Emily Parsons, was born on the old Parsons plantation in Randolph County, Virginia. When in his ninth year, his parents moved to land where East Parsons is now a town. From a small boy he was fond of hounds and hunting. In the winter he would roam the woods in search of game in preference to attending school. As a man he is a hurculean in strength, and would throw a stone with such force it would kill an animal. He was crossing the river, a deer came in sight, he gathered some stones and killed it the first blow.

After his marriage he migrated to California, via the Isthmus of Panama. The sea voyage was more than he had imagined; he was a terribly sea sick man during all of the trip. When he arrived in San Francisco, February 10, 1860, he was a shadow, but he was not discouraged; he went to Sonoma County and secured work for a short time. His cousin, Marion Parsons, wrote for him to travel down to Lexington in the Santa Cruz mountains and engage in logging. Some years later he moved to Monterey County and engaged in farming and stock raising. He now resides in Salinas, California.

JOB WARD PARSONS.

Job W. Parsons, third son of Abraham and Emily Parsons, was born on the James Parsons plantation, in Randolph County, Virginia. He received his education from private schools, and was taught industry at an early age. He launched out on the sea of life for himself March 14, 1859, accepting a position in the wholesale and retail paper store of Edward Towers, in Washington, D. C.; remained there until October; returned home via Harper's Ferry, on the morning of the capture of John Brown, by Col. R. E. Lee, who made short work of the negro uprising. Brown was in prison in front of the Block House.

He hunted deer with hounds during the winter season and captured fifty-two before February. He and his brother Jedson, decided to migrate to California; they sailed from New York to Espinwall, crossed the Isthmus to Panama, thence to San Francisco. He remained in California until December, 1860, when he returned to Virginia to act as deputy sheriff, his father having been elected high sheriff at the previous election.

The war clouds were gathering thick and fast; South Carolina had seceded; an election was held to determine if Virginia would follow. He was appointed in St. George township to announce each voter's name at the polls and how he voted. It was soon known who was in favor of secession. The war was on and the county officers elected at the previous election were not allowed to perform their duty. Another election was held in June. Those in favor of the Union were installed.

He remained at home until November, 1862, when he was forced to take sides or go to prison. He was taken prisoner at 4:00 o'clock in the morning, and he was entertaining the officer with a hunting story; as they were riding through a piece of woods, he leaped from his horse and disappeared in the darkness. He soon decided to cast his lot with the South and went to aid her with all his heart.

He enlisted in A Company, Eighteenth Virginia Cavalry, Captain William H. Taylor in command. He was appointed second Sergeant and General John D. Imboden detailed him as his principal scout. He traveled over all the roads from Harper's Ferry in the Valley, to Bonsack's Depot, south of Lynchburg, Roanoke and Clifton forge.

Company A was considered the best in the regiment, and when the General called on Company A to do any work that required courage, they never disappointed him. They were in the following battles: Gettysburg, Williamsport, Maryland, New Hope, or Piedmont Virginia (General W. E. Jones was killed in this battle), Lynchburg, a battle the 19th of September at Winchester (fought from daylight until dark), Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, New Market. Captain W. H. Taylor was killed in the battle of Winchester. He was one of Randolph County's brave and noble sons.

The men of Company A sent a petition to the General to appoint Parsons Captain of A Company over three Lieutenants, so he was appointed commanding officer according to their will.

In February, 1865, they were in camp in Highland County, and were ordered to report at Lynchburg; when they got within four miles of Lexington, they were told that Lee had surrendered. This was a great disappointment to those brave men; they had played a part in the "lost cause," and the final end was so different from what was expected, they could not realize it was true.

Captain Parsons returned to his home and engaged in farming and stock raising; he bought a stock farm on the rich mountains and dealt in cattle. He closed out in the fall of 1898 and went to California to attend a family reunion. In March, 1899, he and his brother sailed from San Francisco to Valdez, Alaska, in search of gold. From Copper River they went overland with sleds to Dawson, thence to Nome. In the spring he returned to California and spent the winter. In March, 1901, he and his sister and nephew sailed from Seattle to Valdez, Alaska. He spent the summer in Copper River country; in September he returned to his home. He now resides in Kingwood West Virginia, and is surrounded with his grandchildren, which are the pride of his life. His last days may be his happiest.

HARRIET PARSONS LONG.

Harriet Parsons, first daughter of Abraham and Emily Parsons, was born on the old Parsons plantation in Randolph County, Virginia. She was four years of age when her parents moved to what is now East Parsons. She could do all kinds of domestic work when she was twelve years of age, spin, weave, knit and sew. After her marriage she would saddle her horse and take her grist of two bushels to the mill, grind the grain and return home and prepare the dinner for the farm hands at noon. It has been said she could shear a sheep and spin the wool the same day, for the truth of this I do not vouch, as I have not seen her perform the wonderful feat. She made two trips to California and was in that state when the country was shaken up with the "quake," but she did not rise from her bed and rush in the street as the most of them did; she was not alarmed; but she traveled to West Virginia soon afterward so she would be out of reach of the next "shake up."

She is now cosily situated on the farm in Holly Meadows, and enjoys life immensely. She is always ready to assist in sickness, and is a good nurse, which is better than medicine in many cases. In her home she entertains royally, and those who enjoy her hospitality can say she knows how to entertain. Welcome to all is her motto.

Elizabeth Parsons, daughter of Abraham and Emily Parsons, was born on the old Parsons plantation in Randolph County, Virginia, and was two years of age when her parents moved to the farm on which East Parsons now stands. She could sew when she was seven years old, and soon become an expert at spinning and weaving.

Four years after her marriage to John Kalar they migrated to California, and settled on a ranch in Monterey County, where they lived for some time, finally moving to Salinas, where they still reside. MAHALA PARSONS SMITH.

Mahala Parsons, third daughter of Abraham and Emily Parsons, was born on the plantation of her grandfather, James Parsons. Her parents moved to what is now East Parsons, West Virginia, April, 1844. She was endowed with great ambition. When she was ten years of age she could sew, knit and patch quilts, as well as a grown young lady. She could not be surpassed in the culinary art and could do all household duties and appear neatly before any company.

She migrated to California with her parents November, 1872. After her marriage she lived all her life in Gonzales, where she was loved and respected by every one for her noble traits of character.

She was a great sufferer for many years before she passed away. She was received in the M. E. church South, when quite young, and was a follower of the beautiful light beyond. Any little kindness extended to her by others was appreciated in a frank and hearty manner.

Her remains sleep beside her three sons in the Gonzales cemetery.

JAMES PARSONS.

James Parsons was born on the farm on which East Parsons now stands. He was a mere boy when the civil war begun, yet he managed the farm work. In October, '61, as he was riding across the mill race, he was fired upon by union soldiers. He put spurs to his horse to escape and save his animal, but in this he was mistaken for the next day someone piloted the soldiers to Back Bone Mountain, where he and some of the neighbors had hidden their horses, and all were taken.

He is a great traveler, having lived in Texas, and made a number of trips to Alaska, where he was engaged in Mining in Nome, Dawson, and in the Fairbanks Country. He, with his brother, Job, made a daring trip across Alaska over unexplored territory where no white man had ever put foot before. They had many hair-breadth escapes, yet reached Dawson in safety. He has been married twice, but has no children.

JACOB STARTZMAN PARSONS.

Jacob Startzman Parsons was born on the farm that is now East Parsons. He migrated to California when he was 22 years of age, and engaged in farming and stock raising, and at one time had the best herds of cattle and horses in the country. He is considered a very good farmer, and did not farm less than five hundred to two thousand acres. He now resides in Salinas, California.

SARAH PARSONS TALBOTT.

Sarah Parsons, second daughter of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born in Randolph County, Virginia. She was a modest and unassuming girl and was very much admired for her womanly qualities. Though reared in a luxurious home, she was an expert seamstress, and could cut, fit and make an outfit of men's clothing; she also possessed extraordinary business qualities.

After her marriage she lived two miles below St. George, on a farm, and all of her children were born there.

During the civil war she was a brave and fearless woman. They lived on the main road from St. George to Rowlsburg, and after the skirmish above Hannahville, she went to the battle field and claimed the body of the brave Lieutenant McChesney, who fell in the battle, June 29, 1861, and with the assistance of the Home Guards, the body was taken to the Hon. Wm. Ewins' place and interred in his private burial grounds. Half the country side assembled to pay tribute to the brave young man, the first to lay down his life for the cause he deemed the right.

She had many relatives in the Confederate army and she did not know when she might be called upon to stand by the grave of some of her own loved ones.

In April, 1865, she sold her farm and migrated to Illinois with all of her family. Being a woman of good, sound business judgment and foresight, she saw through the misty future the coming glories of the products of the banner corn state. In those days land could be had for a nominal price and today her sons are the most prominent land owners in that country and their investments have proved successful beyond their most sanguine expectations.

In September, 1880, she made the journey to California to visit her son and brothers, stopping on her way to visit a brother in Iowa. She enjoyed meeting her friends, but the change of climate was not a benefit to her and she was taken with pneumonia and died at her brother's home in Gonzales. Her remains rest in Salinas cemetery. She was a devoted Christian, a member of the M. E. church two score years, a loving mother in whose face the light of truth and honesty brightly shone.

ABRAHAM P. TALBOTT.

Abraham P. Talbott, son of B. Johnson Talbott and Sarah Parsons Talbott, was born near St. George, Virginia. Being the oldest boy he was soon put to work on the farm and became an expert with scythe and hoe, and especially adept with the husking peg, thereby gaining much popularity at husking bees where he was always fortunate in getting the red ear of corn, thus having the privilege of kissing the prettiest girl.

In 1865 he moved to Illinois with his parents, but visited Virginia a number of times before his marriage to an Illinois lassie. He went to farming and today has a fine farm near Potomac, Illinois. Should any one desire the rest cure I advise a trip to his farm for he is an adept at story telling and the products of his farm would make one long to lead the simple life.

NANCY TALBOTT VALENTINE.

Nancy Talbott, second daughter of Johnson and Sarah Parsons Talbott, was born on a farm two miles below St. George, in Cheat river valley, Virginia. She attended the district school in the winter and assisted her mother in spinning and weaving, in the summer she was a very busy girl; the sewing was all done by hand in those days, it was often said of her that she did not waste her time in idleness.

She made a visit to relatives in Ohio and met her lover, whom she married the following year, they migrated to Indiana and settled on a farm. She was a woman of ability and could manage the farm while her husband was traveling in California for his health. She and her husband attended the Centennial in Philadelphia and visited relatives in Ohio. She made several trips to Illinois to visit her mother, save this she was always at home with her family. Mrs. Valentine was a member of the M. E. church for many years and was one of the most lovable of women. She was generous of her own strength and energy in behalf of others of her own household and in her circle of acquaintances, many enjoyed her friendship and was grieved to hear of her death.

CHARLES RALPH VALENTINE.

Charles R. Valentine, first son of Charles W. and Nancy A. Talbott Valentine, was born on a farm near Warsaw, Indiana. He was educated in the public schools; for some years he was engaged in the manufacture of cigars but his health failed and he traveled to California to recuperate; after some months in the Golden State, he engaged in business in Oxnard, California, but from the following lines composed by him, his heart wanders back to his boyhood home of his native state:

SPRING BACK YONDER.

How cheerful once again is the balmy breeze of spring!
Bringing joy and gladness to every living thing,
As the bright sunshine melts away the ice and snow,
Causing tiny riverlets to trickle where the pussy-willows grow.
There the froggies holler and the sweet, sweet song of birds,
Could there be sweeter music than this ever heard,
No church chimes in comparison, nor fluttering angel wings,
There is no sweeter melodies. when once again its spring.

On the high bending branches the tempting apple blossoms grow,
Beckoning sweet fragrance to fond children below,
Fairly blooming they hurry on to school, with the bells last ring,
Offering nature's sweetest greetings there, that once again it's spring

With rosy cheeks the girls from school skip the rope in glee,
Now and then a barefoot boy with marbles, it seems real good to see,
Thrilling sounds from yonder lot, "play ball" delighted game they sling,

Such reminders the sun need not shine, to realize once again it's spring.

Life's journey is not all brightness, the world may look sad and blue,

"Tis said every cloud is silver lined, if we remain but staunch and true,

Whenever trouble seems the greatest and sorrows to us cling,
Think then of brighter thoughts that once again it's spring.

DAVID PAUL TALBOTT.

David P. Talbott, was born on the old Talbott homestead in Randolph County, Virginia. He accompanied his parents to Illinois and grew to manhood on the farm. At the age of twenty-one he left home to seek his fortune in California, where he worked as a farm hand until he had saved enough to engage in farming and stock raising.

He owns a fine stock range of twenty-seven hundred acres and also farms; six thousand acres of the Dumphy ranch; one year this land produced forty thousand bags of wheat and barley.

For some years he has been supervisor for his district; he filled the responsible position with entire satisfaction to his constituents, irrespective of their political faith. He has succeeded by his own personal merits.

JAMES R. PARSONS.

James R. Parsons, seventh son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the old plantation. He received his education from private tutors. After he completed his trade of tanner, he engaged in business in the tannery which his father had erected on the plantation. All the leather he could manufacture was sold at home, for in those days everyone wore home made boots and shoes, and harness, saddles and bridles were in demand. He was doing a thriving business when the whole establishment burned.

He then bought four hundred and fifty acres of land on Shafer's Fork and engaged in stock raising. He was a hard worker and an early riser. At log rolling and house raisings, which were very common in those days, he was the life of the party because of his jovial disposition and great energy. He could accomplish a great deal more work with his gang of men than any one on the ground.

After the battle of Corricks Ford, July 13, 1861, he met a Georgia regiment, which had been cut off from the main army, wandering up the mountain side in the pouring rain. They were almost famished. He piloted them to Otter Fork, seven miles from the battle field and provided them with food, which they cooked over a camp-fire. The following day they crossed over the mountain path to Dry Fork and after many hardships reached Monterey, Virginia, before the main army, which had gone via Greenland Gap. The gratitude of these men toward him for saving them is beyond description. They carried him around to the commanding officer's quarters and introduced him as a hero. He remained with this regiment for some time as their guest. He could not return home, for he would be imprisoned for this humane act.

Parsons knew the woods too well to be captured; he passed through the lines to a railroad station and escaped to Iowa to the home of his brother and remained there until the close of the war.

He was a man of influence and held several offices of trust in the county. His last days were peacefully spent on the farm, where he was much loved and respected by the community.

ANDREW BURNS PARSONS

Son of James Parsons

ANDREW BURNS PARSONS.

Andrew B. Parsons, eighth son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the old plantation. He was a man of great ambition, and like all his ancestors, he made a business of agriculture and stockraising. He assumed the charge of his father's plantation and of the negroes, who had a great respect for "Massa Andy." He had the care of his aged parents until they passed away and his kindness and obedience to their every wish was remarkable. He and his faithful loving wife left nothing undone that did not add to their comfort in their declining years.

In 1864 he had the misfortune to lose his left arm in a threshing machine, but it did not lessen his energy and ability to work. He was a man who could not tolerate idleness, and he taught industry to his children, that it might pave a way for them in future years in the fields, where they went to seek their fortunes.

He was a Democrat, and during the civil war lost much property and was annoyed by petty thieves, a class who claimed to be Home Guards, but were better known as the "Swamp Dragons."

He was a liberal patronizer of popular education. Before public schools were organized his family received the benefit of the best instructors the country could afford.

He was widely known as a generous, whole-souled man, and all who came to his home were given the 'glad hand' and a warm welcome.

In October, 1876, he sold his land estate, which he inherited from his father. This land had been in the possession of the Parsons' family for many generations. Twenty children of two generations were reared in the log house, built in 1800 and still intact. Forty-five children were born on this plantation, and thirty-five little pickaninnies were born in the cabins.

A. B. Parsons migrated to California with his family and settled in Monterey County. He engaged in farming and stock raising. He was taken ill at his daughter's home and lingered some time. He had every care by the devoted members of his family until he passed away. He was the last member of James Parsons' family of nine sons and two daughters.

JESSE A. PARSONS.

Jesse A. Parsons, eldest son of Andrew B. and Phebe A. Howe Parsons, was born on the plantation and grew to manhood in the same log house that was built by his grandfather. He inherited the fondness for hunting with a pack of hounds and engaged in the sport in the winter season.

When he concluded to leave the home nest in 1871 and go to Illinois, it was hard to leave the land that had so many pleasant associations and memories, and how many times since then has he not chafed for one long wild gallop over the hills of his native land, chasing after a fox.

He did not remain in Illinois very long until he traveled on to Kansas, where he pre-empted land, but the grasshoppers and drought were too much for a man with a small capital and he pulled up stakes in the spring of 1875 and moved on to California, where he has met with better success. He now resides in San Luis Obispo, and is surrounded with his children and grandchildren.

ROBERT LEE PARSONS.

Robert Lee Parsons, fifth son of Andrew B. and Phebe A. Howe Parsons was born in Tucker County, West Virginia.

In 1876 he accompanied his parents to California and was quite young when she engaged in business near Paso Robles, California. He moved to Arizona and was engaged in the stock business at the time his death occurred in Nogales, Arizona, after an operation for appendicitis has been performed.

He crossed to the Celestial City
Unto the Home gathered throng
And has heard the Angel Choir,
And the joyous burst of song.

When the Heavenly land began to unfold
Raptured visions greeted thy sight,
The joy supreme of life divine
Amid the glories of God's Eternal Light.

Oh! the sweet content, the peaceful calm
In that City centered in a lovely plain,
Where there is no end of summer sunshine
Ever blooming flowers amid fields of golden grain.

Sweet be thy sleep 'neath the starry sky
Where thy form was laid to rest
Our hearts are comforted with a balm,
A soft whisper cometh "God knoweth best."

THOMAS SLACK PARSONS.

Thomas Slack Parsons, ninth son of James and Nancy Rust Parsons, was born on the plantation in Randolph County, Virginia.

He was a natural mechanic; he built his house on the land given to him by his father and it is still in possession of his children. Many grand functions were given in his quaint old home in his day; nine sons were given an "Infare" as they termed it in those days, when they brought home their brides. When the wedding party was within a mile of the groom's home it was the custom for two men to run a race for the bottle. When he brought his bride home his brother Abraham entered the race for the bottle with a man of Taggarts Valley. They rushed over hill and dale through the Cheat river, all of the guests and "darkies" were out to witness this exciting race. Their enthusiasm was at high pitch when Parsons won and triumphantly carried the bottle decorated with a white ribbon, back to the party and presented it to the bride; it was passed to all the party and they drank to the health of the newly wedded pair. Thomas Parsons was a devoted father, he was never known to strike one of his children, yet their obedience to him was remarkable. He was never known to speak unkindly of any one. His life was peaceful and pleasant. When the end came he bore his illness without a murmur.

MILES PARSONS.

Miles Parsons, sixth son of Thomas Parsons, Jr., was born seven miles from Moorfield, Virginia, on the home plantation and was educated in his native town. His business relation with the world began at an early age; he and his brother Thomas inherited the home plantation at the death of their father and much valuable lands in Pendleton County.

He purchased the interest in all the lands and stock when the brother migrated to Missouri.

He was extensively engaged in stock raising and was a noted lover of fine horses and always had a number of thoroughbreds in his stables. He was an excellent judge of horses and was often called to give his opinion on the merits of this noble animal, by his many friends of Western Virginia, who came to the South Branch to purchase fine stock. Though not a betting man he was always ready to back his judgment with coin on the results of a horse race.

He was a liberal subscriber to every project which was for the building up of the community, of which he was an active enterprising citizen. He was courteous and gentlemanly in his demeanor, generous and social and enjoyed the confidence and the esteem of his fellow man.

He died very suddenly while on his way to Moorefield on a warm summer day. His remains lie in the family plot on the plantation which is still in the possession of his descendants.

ADAM HARNESS PARSONS.

Adam H. Parsons, first son of Miles and Jemima Harness Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Virginia, and was reared on the plantation of his father. When war was declared between the states he enlisted and was considered to be as brave a man as ever donned the grey; he was in the seven days' siege before Richmond and all the hard fought battles during the war, he endured all the hardships and was not sick or off duty a single day. He was an ardent lover of the "Lost Cause."

After the war closed he engaged in the stock business on his farm and his home was open to all his friends, a warm welcome was given to them.

His descendants reside in Hardy County, West Virginia.

He was in the battle of Cedar Rapids, Gettysburg and all the hard fought battles during the war and was not wounded or sick in all the four years of hardships.

CAPTAIN JAMES PARSONS.

Captain James Parsons, second son of Thomas Parsons, Sr., was born in Virginia. He enlisted in the Revolutionary war and arose to the rank of captain. He and his brother Thomas Parsons were the first explorers of Randolph County, Virginia. He pre-empted the Horse Shoe lands in 1770 and after he obtained his patents he bought other tracts of land. During the time Captain Parsons and brother were locating and surveying their lands the Indians were on the War Path and would kill every man they could for a horse or a gun, but both were so well posted on Indian tricks they were not led into the many decoys which the Indians would place in their way. They made many trips from Hardy County over the Alleghany mountains, while they were exploring and surveying the lands.

In March, 1774, Captain Parsons with his party made the journey from his home to the Horse Shoe lands traveling over the mountain trail with pack horses. Arriving at their destination they camped in the woods until the fort was built of logs with holes between that they might see the approach of the Indians and defend themselves by shooting through these holes. The door was of heavy wood and bars across the inside.

The men cleared the land for corn fields, while the women and children remained in the fort. When the alarm was given of Indians, the men all ran to the fort and barred the door. During the night one man stood guard while the inmates slept without fear. Wild geese, deer, bear and other animals furnished meat. The men would hunt in pairs. The fresh water streams furnished all kinds of fish.

Early in the fall the Indians were growing so bold that Captain Parsons and his party concluded to return to Hardy County. The fort and all the improvements were abandoned until the spring of 1775. The settlers returned, but I have no record that they were the same that were there before. Robert Cunningham and John Goff's names appear, both of whose wives were Parsons. They resumed work on the lands but still lived in the fort. Bernard Sims, a herder for Captain Parsons lived in a cabin in what is still known as "Sim's bottom." A level piece of land over the river from the Horse Shoe. He had been placed there it seems because he had small-pox and had been isolated. A negro woman was nursing the family. She spied the Indians creeping to the cabin through the tall grass. Sims met them at the door, but was shot by the Indians.

They were going to scalp him but they ran away yelling, "small-pox." The family escaped their vengeance.

On a sunny day the men were hoeing corn, a turkey gobbled on the hill. Captain Parsons remarked, I will see what is the matter with that turkey. He crawled around up on the hill. An Indian was sitting behind a tree. He fired and the gobbler fell and was quieted. Captain Parsons tied a piece of hickory bark around his leg and dragged him down the hill. I have no record when the funeral took place. After this the settlers were not molested. I have no record when Solomon, Isaac and Jonathan Parsons, sons of Captain Parsons, moved to the Horse Shoe. Captain Parsons was married twice. His first wife's name was Elizabeth. Deeds signed by her Elizabeth Parsons, maiden name not known. He died in the year 1813. The following will was probated by his wife and son:

CAPTAIN JAMES PARSONS' WILL.

In the name of God, Amen. I, Captain James Parsons, of Hardy County and state of Virginia, being advanced to considerable age, but of sound mind and memory do this day of July, in the year of One Thousand Eight Hundred and Eleven, make and publish this my last will and testament in the following manner. I give and bequeath to my affectionate wife, Rebecca Parsons, my dwelling house and all out houses and the furniture with the conveniences thereunto belonging, and one-half of my home place with the negroes Sambo, Hannah and Sylvia for and during her natural life, and I direct my said wife to clothe, school and support her daughters by me until they marry, and Jonathan until he arrives at the age of twenty-one; only all this I give to my wife and at her death I do request that all the negroes and any property of any description may be disposed of and the proceeds divided equally amongst her children by me. I give and bequeath to my three sons Isaac, Solomon and Jonathan Parsons, (sons of my wife Rebecca) all my lands on the Cheat river, known by the name of the Horse Shoe bottom, agreeable to a division and boundaries already made by me and known to them, and I give to my son Isaac, a negro boy named Ardon; to Solomon, I give a negro boy named Ise; and to Jonathan, a negro boy named Berry, all this I give to my said sons and theirs forever. I give and bequeath to my daughters, Betsy, Amanda Molonica, and Rebecca Parsons, one thousand dollars each, to be paid to them out of my home place by my son James Parsons when they arrive at twenty-one years and to their heirs; and to Betsy, I give negroes Sally and Sambo, (son of Isaac); to Amanda Molonica, I gave negroes Vinney and Jerry; and to Rebecca I give negroes Helen and Tom; all this I bequeath to my three daughters and their heirs forever. I give and bequeath to my son James Parsons, my home plantation subject to the above bequests, and should his mother die before his sisters marry or his brother Jonathan arrives at age, I do subject my said son to all the provisions made incumbent on his mother for their support, and I give my said son James, all out surveys and all property not willed or bequeathed and all debts due me, and subject him my said son to the payments of all my just debts and funeral expenses, and direct that all property undivided or willed, be disposed of for this purpose, and the surplus if any to be his, or a deficiency to be made good by him. I do hereby constitute and appoint my wife Rebeccah and my son Isaac executrix and executor of my will and testament with full and complete power to make all necessary conveyances of property to be disposed of, and to do all things to effect this purpose in an ample manner. All this I confide to my wife and son, not doubting their endeavors in the execution. To this my last will and testament I set my hand and seal this 25th day of July and year above written, and exclude all my children of my former marriage from any participation, having already given them more than the present family possess, and I also exclude my daughter, Dinna Hider, and her husband Michael Hider, from any part, having given them six hundred and twenty pounds already.

Done in the presence of the witnesses and signed, sealed, published and declare by the testator as and for his last will and testament who at his request and in his presence and in presence of each other, subscribed our names, George Harness, Sam McMechin, James Machie.

At a court held for Hardy County, the 13th day of April, 1813. This last will and testament of James Parsons, deceased, was produced in Court by Rebecca Parsons and Isaac Parsons, the executrix and executor named therein, provided by the oaths of George Harness, Jr., Samuel McMechin and James Machie, the witnesses thereto, and ordered to be recorded, and on the motion of the said Rebecca Parsons and Isaac Parsons certificate is granted them for obtaining a probate thereof in due form, they having taken the oath of an executor, and together with Jammes Machie and James Parsons, their securities, entered into and acknowledged a bond in the penalty of six thousand dollars, conditioned as the law directs.

SOLOMON PARSONS, M. D.

Solomon Parsons, son of Captain James Parsons, was born in Hampshire County, Virginia, and was reared on the plantation and received his education from the select schools of Romney. He was a graduate from a medical college of New York and began his practice after he moved to the Horse Shoe, where he was successful in every particular.

All his energies were bent to the cause of carrying forward any social reform movement. When the slave question was agitated, he took a firm and active part and gave his negro emancipation, sending him to a free state with means that he might not suffer before he could find employment. His one great effort was the construction of good schools, that his children might have a good opportunity for an education. To him was due, perhaps more than to any other man, the building of the Ann Eliza church, which is still perfectly intact and the meetings are conducted there now by the M. E. denomination. He was a liberal subscriber to the good work, and encouraged each member to do the same. He was a member of the M. E. church for sixty years.

In politics he was a Whig, but became a staunch Republican after that party was inaugurated. Although he never desired an office, his vigorous efforts were for his candidate. His nature was impulsive and he could no more conceal an ill feeling than he could conceal smoke.

His family lived in luxurious comfort; his wife and daughters dressed fashionably; went about and were not denied any pleasure that suited his fancy. He retired from active business and moved to Terre Alto, West Virginia, 1863, where he died; the remains of he and his faithful wife lie in the Kingwood cemetery, West Virginia.

HANNAH PARSONS.

Hannah Parsons, third daughter of William and Catherine Stoker Parsons, and wife of Solomon Parsons, M. D., was born in Hardy County, Virginia. She was taken to western Virginia by her parents when quite young; by her modest appearance and beauty of character she won the respect and love of every one. The world to her was not evil, it was a beautiful place. She had the ability to bring out kindness in the most unlikely person. She was very fond of flowers and grew the most choice varieties in her garden. She gave two orphaned girls a mother's love and care and they were happily married from the home that had sheltered them so many years. She was a devoted Christian and a member of the M. E. church sixty years.

Death opens wide the gate to life immortal,
And those who die believing cross the portal,
Where the waves of anguish cease to roll,
And rest is given to the very soul.

JAMES WILLIAM PARSONS.

James W. Parsons, son of Dr. Solomon and Hannah Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe in Randolph County, Virginia. He was reared on the home plantation. He engaged in extensive stock raising; a large portion of his land was devoted to grain raising which yielded splended crops every year. Politically he allied himself with the Republican party and was an influential, prominent member of the party.

He moved to Kingkood, West Virginia, 1860, and retired from business, dividing his lands with his children. He was a devoted member of the M. E. church. His remains were laid in the Kingwood cemetery; a handsome monument has been erected to him and his wife, by their granddaughter, whom they had reared.

JANE REBBECCA PARSONS WHEELER.

Jane Rebecca Parsons, first daughter of James W. and Catherine Neville Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe, Virginia; the house stood on a bluff overlooking the Cheat river flowing serenely through the green fields, under perfect cultivation and like most Virginia homes it was celebrated from its earliest days for the most graceful and openhanded hospitality, it was the land of plain living, high thinking, the abode of simplicity and democracy.

Every one lived in a modest home and the measure of a man's success was not in his equipages or his dwelling, but in his manhood and decency of his soul.

In this Christian home surrounded by good influence, she grew to womanhood, her agreeable social qualities were very engaging, to her many friends, for she was one of the most attractive girls of that period. After her marriage—and children came to bless the home, she never failed to accompany them to church and Sunday school.

She passed away very suddenly after the birth of the eighth child, leaving the heart-broken husband in despair, the grandfather raised the little girl and she is now the wife of Dr. S. A. Pratt, of Kingwood, West Virginia. The other children are in different parts of West Virginia.

SANSOME E. PARSONS.

Sansome E. Parsons, second son of James W. Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe, near the stockade of the old fort of Indian times. He was a great grandson of Captain James Parsons, William Parsons and General Neville, all Revolutionary War veterans. His mother's death occurred as he was growing into manhood. He was a devoted brother to his sisters.

S. E. Parsons was an influential man; he was president of the County Court four years and held other offices of trust. He owned four thousand acres of land and was engaged in the lumber business. He was injured in the logging camp, and soon after built a fine house in Parsons, West Virginia, where he resided until his death.

HANNAH AGNES PARSONS.

Hannah Agnes Parsons, second daughter of James W. and Catherine Neville Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe. She was left with the care of the family after the death of her mother. She married S. A. Parsons, but lived only a short time. She was a very sweet Christian girl and much beloved by everyone.

HELEN LOUISE PARSONS.

Helen Louise Parsons, fourth daughter of J. W. and Catherine Neville Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe, and grew to womanhood on the plantation. She made her home with her aged grandparents until they both passed away. She married Jacob Miller and migrated to the state of Washington, where she now resides. Her husband passed away a short time ago. She had no children.

ANNE AMELIA PARSONS.

Anne Amelia Parsons, fifth daughter of J. W. and Catherine Neville Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe. She had arrived at the age when a mind can think and reason, when she was left without the guiding hand of a mother. She knew that a certain gale would send her ship in the wrong course, so she adjusted her sails and put out for the port of right, remembering the influences given her by the loving mother, who left this world believing God would watch over her children. At the death of her eldest sister she felt it was her plain sense of duty to be a mother to the children; she made their home pleasant until the second mother appeared on the scene. She married Lloyd Pifer, and died one year later, leaving a little daughter three months old. She was very much beloved by all who knew her.

ANNE EUGENIA PIFER.

Anne Eugenia Pifer, daughter of Lloyd and Anne A Parsons Pifer, was born in St. George, West Virginia. When her mother became aware of the fact that she could not live to bring up her daughter, she requested Mrs. Elizabeth Bowman to give her precious child a home; she was a very dear friend of the family and she knew the kind, worthy people would rear her properly, and educate her. They cast their "bread upon the waters," but it has been returned tenfold. She has been a true daughter; she cared for them until they passed away. She now resides in Parsons, West Virginia.

SOLOMON J. PARSONS.

Solomon J. Parsons, third son of James W. and Catherine Neville Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe, the spot noted for great beauty in summer, but more beautiful in the fall, when the leaves are turning brown and are of all hues and colors which no artist can paint. He owns four hundred acres of land one mile from St. George. His farm is well improved and stocked with the best cattle and horses. He is considered one of the most famous hunters of all the Parsons. One season he killed 31 deer, and met with an accident which was marvellous it did not prove fatal; he fell over a high cliff, 85 feet, striking projecting rocks several times, and rolled into the Cheat River. C. L. Parsons dragged him from the water unconscious. He speedily recovered and continued hunting. He married Emma Parsons, daughter of Job Parsons, Sr. They spent one year traveling in California and different states. His friends are given as warm a welcome in his home as the flowers in May, and his wife is an adept in the art of entertaining.

REBECCA ANNE AMELIA PARSONS ELLIOTT.

Rebecca A. A. Parsons, second daughter of Dr. Solomon and Hannah Parsons, was born in the Horse Shoe, in Randolph County, Virginia. She was educated in a private school and was reared on the farm. After her marriage she moved to Barbour County and reared her family on the land where Belington is now located. She was a woman of untiring energy; her home was open to all; she entertained her friends in true Southern style; the best was none too good. For the rich and poor alike her name will go down in history as a sweet Christian character. Her remains sleep in the family plot on the hill above Belington, beside her husband and two sons and a daughter.

MALVINA ELLIOTT KNOTTS.

Malvina Elliott, first daughter of William and Rebecca A. A. Parsons Elliott, was born in Barbour County Virginia. After her marriage she lived in Meadowville. She had high aspirations and a home well ordered. After the death of her husband, she built a house in Belington and hired a negro man and his wife (slaves of her father), to manage her household. Her health gradually failed; she went to Corpus Christi, Texas, to her brother, hoping to recover. She passed away the sixth week after her arrival there. Her remains were sent to Belington. She was a consistent member of the M. E. church South. Her funeral was conducted by Rev. Ware, M. E. church South, pastor, assisted by Rev. D. G. Griffin, of the Baptist church.

EDGAR C. ELLIOTT.

Edgar C. Elliott, first son of William and R. A. A. Parsons Elliott, was born in Barbour County, West Virginia, and was brought up on the farm. When the war was declared between the states he enlisted in the Confederate army.

SOLOMON PARSONS ELLIOTT.

Solomon P. Elliott, second son of William and Rebecca A. A. Parsons Elliott, was born in Barbour County, Virginia. He enlisted in the Confederate army in 1861, and was appointed lieutenant very soon after his enlistment. He served throughout the war in Imboden's division. His health became impaired from exposure and he died the following year.

ELIZABETH REBECCA ROSENBURGER WRIGHT.

Elizabeth R. Rosenburger, daughter of H. Clay Rosenburger and Hannah Etta Elliott Rosenburger, was one of Belington's bright and best ladies; her home, modeled after the truest conception of what the term implies, was an ideal one. As the reigning queen, her home life inspired the visitor with loftier thoughts and higher aspirations. Thoughtful, modest and self sacrificing, she daily displayed the character of her inner life—the Christly, the guiding star of her brief career.

But the Death Messenger invaded this happy home and carried away the husband's devoted companion and the children's beloved mother. She peacefully bid farewell to the world; so gently did she depart with her Savior, that it was like the setting of the sun on a quiet summer evening. Her labors of fatigue have closed here, but those of love and eternal progressiveness have just begun in the Mansion of Glory, while waiting and watching for loved ones to come.

ISAAC PARSONS, SR.

Isaac Parsons, third son of Thomas Parsons, was born in Virginia. He inherited the plantation known as the "Gibson Farm" and other valuable lands in Hampshire County. Deed from James and David Parsons to Mary Parsons, shows that James and David Parsons were the only children and the said Mary, the widow of Isaac Parsons, son of Thomas Parsons, Sr.; deed dated September 16, 1797; and that Isaac Parsons was then dead. Tradition has it he was drowned in the South Branch river, but not certain of this fact.

JAMES PARSONS, JR.

James Parsons, Jr., eldest son of Isaac Parsons, Sr., was born in Hampshire County, Virginia. In ordinary affairs he was quiet. His sense of honor was such that he would not do an unmanly act. If he did forget himself for a minute, he was ready to right the wrong so far as apologies had the power to do so. He hated lies, cowardice and deceit, and the one who sinned in this particular must, before again gaining his favor, wipe out the contamination of iniquity in a multitude of praiseworthy acts. His ambition was to show himself a man in repelling assault upon principles he believed to be right. He was a perfect man physically—six feet in height. His plantation consisted of many hundred acres and his herds of cattle and horses were of the best. He sold much of his fine stock to stockmen in Randolph, Harrison and Barbour counties, and his home was seldom without a crowd, as he was fond of company. He was hospitable to a fault, a good business man, a prominent and public spirited citizen, respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

The following will shows how he disposed of his vast estate:

By the will of James Parsons, Jr., dated Nov. 7, 1846, and probated Feb. 22, 1847, he devises to his sons, James and Isaac Parsons, lands viz.: the Casey tract, the Collins tract, the Jake Sugar Run tract, the McGuire tract, and five town lots in Romey. And all negroes, cattle, horses, monies on hand and all other personal property, subject to the following legacies, viz.: to his son-in-law, Adam Stump, $2,000 in addition to the $8,000 which I heretofore let him have for the use of his children; to his daughter Rebecca Fairfax, the tract of land in Preston County, Virginia, where she now resides, in addition to the $800 given to her husband for the use of his children, the land to go to her children at her death; to his daughter, Elizabeth Shobe, $7,200 in addition to the $2,800 given to her for the use of her children; to his son-in-law, John M. Pancake, the Den Farm on the South Branch and the sum of $1,792 for my grandchildren, Isaac, John and Sarah, children of John M. Pancake; to his son-in-law, Samuel D. Brady, $7,985 in addition to the $2,014 heretofore given to him for the use of his children; to his son-in-law, Thomas Blue, $4,700 in addition to the $300 I have already given him for the use of his children; to his son-in-law, George R. Jacobs, $9,550 in addition to what I have heretofore given him for the use of his children; to my son, David C. Parsons, the farm known as the Cunningham and the land on the Allegheny.

MARY C. STUMP JENNINGS.

Mary C. Stump, first daughter of James and Catherine Casey Parsons, was born in Hampshire County, Virginia. After her marriage she moved to a farm near Weston. When the civil war was declared, Weston was a hot bed of unionists, and she was sent across the lines. The following will show the vicissitudes she passed through:

Headquarters Brig., 2nd Div., Dept. West Virginia.

Clarksburg, West Virginia, Nov. 12, 1863.

Lieut. M. J. Russell, Ind. Div., Dept. W. Va., New Creek:

Sir—I herewith return the letter of Mrs. M. G. Jennings, and submit the following report in conformity with the endorsement of Dept. Headquarters: A number of citizens of Weston have been consulted in reference to John P. Jennings; they say he is an avowed "Rebel"; he left his home when the rebellion broke out and remained absent about three months; he got back through the influence of his friends. He again left last spring, with the rebel forces under Imboden Jones and Jackson (W. S.) and took with him his horses, cattle and six negroes and is supposed to be in Virginia. Gen. Roberts sent his wife and children across the lines; it is understood that she is at her fathers in Hampshire County, and the citizens say let her stay there. I have the honor to be,

Respy. your Obt. Svt.,

N. WILKINSON, Col CONLY, Brigadier.

Headquarters Department West Virginia.

This is to certify that a memorial signed by loyal citizens of Lewis County, West Virginia, in behalf of Mrs. John P. Jennings, asking that she might be permitted to return to the said Lewis County, she complying with the President's Amnesty Proclamation, Mrs. Jennings being anxious to avail herself of the same is therefore permitted to return with her seven children; all military officers will report this order and not molest her or interfere with Mrs. Jennings on her journey or after her return to her home.

B. F. KELLEY, Brig. Gen.

Mrs. Jennings arrived home safely and I presume was given a warm welcome by her gracious friends.

JAMES PARSONS, JR., III, (known as Zip).

James Parsons, first son of James and Elizabeth Miller Parsons, was born in Hampshire County, Virginia. He spent his boyhood days on the plantation of his father attending the home schools; he attended the Georgetown College, from which institution he was a graduate, being appointed valedictorian on that auspicious occasion, which was proof that he was considered the brightest young man in the college at that time. He chose civil engineering as his profession, and being a man of good sound business judgment and foresight, he saw through the dim misty future the coming of a railroad through West Virginia. At that time the task resembled in enormity the struggle of the camel in his endeavor to penetrate the needle's eye; but he showed himself equal to every emergency and met the vicissitudes boldly and with indefatigable perseverance, reaching the goal of his desire, even though the barriers met with seemed well-nigh insurmountable. He engineered the Western Maryland R. R. through the state, and ingratiated himself into the tender feelings of the people, and today he is considered well-nigh invincible. The record he made is one of which his family may feel proud, and it may be truthfully said he was an honest man and earned his popularity by study and perseverance.

He was generous in all things, a true citizen, a loyal and trustworthy friend, and these traits endeared him to his friends. He passed away in Davis, West Virginia.

WILLIAM MILLER PARSONS.

William Miller Parsons, second son of James and Elizabeth Miller Parsons, was born in Hampshire County, Virginia, and grew to manhood on the plantation. He received his education from the home schools and the Georgeown College. He studied law with John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia. After his health failed he went to Texas, and from there to Kansas City. He was offered the principalship of a school in Jefferson City, Missouri, but declined it and became a salesman in the stock yards in Kansas City for Hunt & Evans. Later he became the Western buyer for Squires & Co., the great packers of Boston. He was known as the best hog man in the West, and bought thousands of hogs for them every year, and commanded a large salary. He was a man of great intelligence and had many friends. With the world, with his acquaintances, he was a good natured, generous and warm-hearted man, ready at all times to do anything for anybody in need. He died in Chicago, January, 1907, honored, respected, beloved and lamented by all his friends.

To him, by his first wife, Anna Bentz, was born one son, Edgar, who is a dentist and lives in Lynchburg, Virginia; by his second wife, one daughter, Josephine Pullman, living in East St. Louis, Missouri.

REBECCA PARSONS FAIRFAX.

Rebecca Parsons Fairfax, third daughter of James Parsons, Jr., was born in Hampshire County, Virginia and married General Buckner Fairfax, a relative of Lord Fairfax. Their plantation was on the Cheat river, in Preston County. She was a true daughter of the south, and was distinguished for her patriotic love and devotion for the "Lost Cause." She was a woman of executive ability in managing her affairs. Very little now remains to mark the spot of the busy scenes of life over her premises; the rattle of the loom and the whirr of the spinning wheel is heard no more. The log house that has witnessed so many scenes of gaiety, has fallen to decay and the plantation song is hushed forever; but she left behind her an imperishable name. Her descendants are still in possession of the land; they reside in Preston County.

As to the children of Thomas Parsons, I.:

Prudence married Robert Cunningham and they had numerous descendants in Hardy and Grant Counties, West Virginia, where some of them are now living; others in Missouri and other western states.

Arness married William Welton and they have descendants in Hardy and Grant Counties, West Virginia and in the western states.

As to Baldwin, the youngest child of Thomas Parsons, I., he seems to have had one son named Isaac, (but cannot be sure of this.) I find that by a deed of the 7th of November, 1846, Isaac Parsons and Rebecca, his wife, of Saline County Missouri, conveyed to David Parson and Catherine, his wife, of Shelby County, Missouri, a piece of land which seems to be a tract devised by Thomas Parsons, I., to Baldwin Parsons.

A deed from Baldwin Parsons, March 1, 1776, shows that Baldwin Parsons signed his name "Boylwin," and that his wife's name was Rachel.

A deed of Emancipation, Baldwin Parsons to negro John, February 15, 1793, shows that he was then in the County of Ohio, and his name is again signed "Boylwin."

David Crawford Jacobs, eighth son of George B. R. and Louisa T. Parsons Jacobs, was born at "The Oaks," Boone County, Missouri.

A FAMILY REUNION.

Four generations meet and make merry on the eightieth birthday of Mrs. Emily Parsons, the oldest pioneer resident of Gonzales, California. The event was celebrated October 17, 1879, at the residence of L. P. Smith, a son-in-law.

At one o'clock the celebrants sat down to a table spread on the lawn under over-hanging trees; four generations were present. After they were seated, Mother Parsons invoked the blessing of the guiding hand to guide her loved one along the path which leads to life everlasting. During the course of the reunion, feast speeches were made by various ones, all of whom referred in pleasing terms to the strength of mind and body that had followed Mother Parsons down the valley of life.

Thirty-seven years had elapsed since the family had all met, the youngest was at her mother's knee, now all of the second generation were wearing glasses. At the conclusion of the feast pictures were taken of the four generations.

Emily Parsons moved to Gonzales in 1875. At that time the nearest doctor was twenty miles away. She endeared herself to the people by attending them in sickness. She was widely known as Grandma Parsons. Captain J. W. Parsons, her son and Mrs. Harriet Long, her daughter of Parsons, West Virginia, came to California for the occasion. She was delighted to see all of her children together once more. She passed away September 8, 1898 and now awaits the great reunion on the other shore.

THE PARSONS' REUNION.

The first annual Parsons' Family Reunion was held at the Presbyterian White Oak church, in Tucker County, West Virginia, on July 28, 1907. The committee on arrangements made a bower of the place by decorating it with ferns, cypress, wild Indigo and flowers which grew in the woods nearby.

Before ten o'clock the people began to arrive in hacks, buggies, road wagons and horse-back, while those nearby, walked. One hundred and fifty names were enrolled, all Parsons or related by marriage. At eleven o'clock the exercises were opened by organ; voluntary prayer by Solomon J. Parsons of St. George; anthem by choir; opening address "Pioneer life of the Parsons" by Leland S. Parsons, of Oakland, California; a solo by Hazel Hulings of Parsons, duet by Pearl and Nellie Long; recitations by Martha Parsons and Mrs. C. W. Minearh; Miss Mary Kathryn Minear presided at the organ and conducted the exercises. Dinner was announced and a recess was taken.

The tables were loaded with every imaginable good thing to tempt the appetite of the most fastidious. There was enough fried chicken on the tables to satisfy a Methodist camp meeting. Every one seemed to enjoy it and ate long and heartily.

Some had not met for twenty years and they enjoyed talking over the days of long ago. The Thomas concert band was present and entertained with some splendid music, which added much pleasure to the occasion. In the afternoon some wills were read by Mrs. J. S. Brown. The Hon. J. Slidell Brown of Kingwood, West Virginia, was called to the speaker's stand and delivered a fine address. He said it was worth traveling fifty miles to get a seat in the middle of the well loaded table where he could reach both ways. He sampled sixteen cakes and ate sixteen pieces of chicken, with all the other things, and he could not decide who was the best cook, being sure his wife could not do better, she being a Parsons.

Professor Dickson W. Parsons, was called to the speaker's stand and proceeded to form an organization. It was voted to hold the annual reunion the third Saturday of August. The following officers were elected: President, Solommon J. Parsons; Vice-President, Joseph Parsons; Secretary, Bascom B. Parsons; Historian, Minnie Parsons; Assistant, M. K. Minear. They adjourned and every one went home feeling happy and hoping to meet again the next year. The eldest Parson in attendance was Mrs. Adeline Parsons; the youngest, Keith Parsons Brown, son of Stélla Parsons Brown, of Kingwood.

The second annual reunion of the Parsons' family was held August 15, 1908, at the same place as the previous year; the crowd began to assemble at eight o'clock. Promptly at eleven o'clock the officers were all present and the exercises began with prayer by Solomon J. Parsons, solo by Hazel Hulings; Miss M. K. Minear presided at the organ. The song, "Nearer my God to Thee," was sung by the choir; recitation by Mrs. C. M. Linger; "Touring the West," by Miss Anna Bonifield; "Across the Continent," by Mrs. N. C. Parsons Hansford; "The River of Time," by V. Parsons MacCabe, and "Parsons' History," by Minnie Parsons. After the exercises, the tables were spread and the eating match began. There was enough to appease the hunger of every one present and still enough to fill twelve baskets more. The picture was taken and the election of officers followed: President, Ward L. Parsons; Vice-President, Lemuel W. Parsons; Secretary, C. M. C. Linger. One hundred and seventy-five registered representatives were present from California, Minnesota, Illinois and Georgia.

The third annual Parsons' reunion was held at the same place as the previous year, August 21, 1909; Ward L. Parsons, as President. After all were assembled, the minutes were read by the Secretary and speeches were made by: George W. Parsons, of Newton, Iowa; J. Slidell Brown of Kingwood. Mrs. Stella Brown read the eulogy on her grandfather, Abraham Parsons, and Robert S. Parsons, twin brother to Abraham, it being one hundred years since they were born. After the election of officers, the pictures were taken and it was voted to hold the next meeting at Parsons, West Virginia.

The fourth annual Parsons' reunion was held August 20, 1910, at the park near Parsons, a beautiful place thickly wooded, with wild flowers blooming everywhere. The day was ideal and every one was on the ground early in the morning, enjoying the outing. The officers were all present and proceeded to entertain the throng who had assembled to honor their ancestors. Owing to the funeral of one who was connected with the family, the program could not be carried through, but every one enjoyed the elaborate luncheon, and after electing officers for the coming year, departed for home feeling the day was one not to be forgotten and pledging themselves to meet with them all again at Presbyterian White Oak church, 1911.

The fifth Parsons' annaul reunion was held at the Presbyterian church at White Oak Grove, August 19, 1911. Early in the morning the throng of people were winding their way up the hill to this beautiful spot. The cool, bracing breezes blew softly from the mountains across the tranquil waters of the winding Cheat river.

This scene will never be forgotten by those who had not been there before and those who had not been there for more than two years. The meeting of many was pathetic; as they clasped hands their hearts overflowed with gladness and they could only murmur a welcome, so great was their agitation.

Solomon J. Parsons called the meeting to order and proceeded with the program. Everything passed off pleasantly. Those present from distant states were: Isaac Parsons, of Denver, Colorado; Caleb R. Hank, wife and daughter of Thermopolis, Wyoming; Effie Parsons of Minneapolis; May Parsons and three children of Gonzales, California. Those present from other towns were: Dr. E. H. Parsons, Piedmont, West Virginia; George Parsons of Keyser; the Johnsons of Elkins, Meadowville and Bealaington; the Lantz of Davis; Capt. J. W. Parsons of Kingwood and gran'son, G. F. Brown; D. W. Parsons, wife and son of Montgomery.

Refreshments were served and everyone enjoyed the day immensely and look forward to the next meeting which will be held at the same place in 1912.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Cyrus Parsons; Vice-President, Bascomb B. Parsons; Secretary, Elizabeth Parsons; Treasurer, M. C. Parsons Pifer.

The sixth Parsons' family reunion was held at Golden Gate Park, May 11, 1912. The "clam" began to arrive at the Haight street entrance at 11:30 o'clock. The reception committee welcomed them and each one was tagged with a red, white and blue barge to show they were members of the "tribe." They were all escorted to the grounds and the lunch table was spread.

After every one was seated at the table, which was loaded with all kinds of good things, Leslie E. Burks, chairman, who is one of the family by marriage, touched the button and the feast began. Everyone ate heartily and many speeches were made during the luncheon hour.

The day was not ideal for a picnic and outing, but all enjoyed it to the fullest extent. There were four generations represented, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Burks and daughter; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Parsons; Mrs. E. Faw and son; Mrs. L. M. Hicks; Mrs. F. Hart; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Soberanes and children; Judson Parsons, Jr.; Mrs. M. P. Gates and sons; Mr. and Mrs. C. Schafer and son; Mrs. N. H. Bledsoe; Mrs. N. P. Schoonover; J. H. Parsons and son; Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Collins; Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Hellman; Miss Ida Bledsoe, Mrs. E. Harrah and son; Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Massengill; Mrs. R. Dey; Mrs. R. A. Bonnifield; Mrs. L. B. Evans; Mrs. V. P. McCabe; Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Parsons and son; Mrs. S. H. Parsons; Mr. J. H. Leitle; Mrs. E. H. Brown; Mrs. N. J. Brown; Mrs. R. Bragg; Charles B. Parsons

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Judson Parsons, Jr.; Vice-President, Nancy Parsons Hellman; Secretary, V. P. McCabe; Treasurer, A. E. Burks.

The meeting adjourned and everyone was delighted with their day so pleasantly spent, forming new acquaintances and renewing old friendships.

PARSONS' REUNION.

The sixth Annual Parsons Association assembled at the Holly Meadow church, August 17, 1912. The meeting was called to order at eleven o'clock by Ward L. Parsons. The Parsons' Concert Band played "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" and the Reverend Henry Clay pastor of the M. E. church South, conducted the devotional services. Hon. Lloyd Hansford delivered the opening address. He compared the Parsons Pioneer to the sturdy oak tree that spreads its branches and resists the storms through many years and continue to grow and wax stronger. The Parsons now reach from Maine to California. The choir sang "America," music by the Band, after which the Secretary read an interesting letter from Hon. W. H. Brown of Kingwood, West Virginia, regretting he could not be present and enjoy the day with one of Virginia's oldest families. Solo, "Come Back to Erin," by Miss Lalah Scott; reading minutes of California Association held at Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, California, May, 1912, by Virginia Parsons MacCabe, of Oakland, California. The morning exercises closed in order to register.

The lunch tables were spread in the grove with all manner of good things and a general invitation was given to all to come forward and partake of the refreshments. The Rev. W. W. Grover invoked divine blessings and everyone was soon enjoying the most important part of the entertainment. After the contents of the lunch basket were disposed of the vast crowd visited with friends whom they had not seen before in many years. The program was continued in the afternoon. Music by the band; J. J. Scott made a short address. He spoke in a pleasant manner of his affiliation with Parsons when he first came to the county.

William Lee Parsons is numbered among the leading young farmers of St. Charles County. He owns and operates a well improved farm located on section 22, township 45, range 2, and was born on this farm April 28, 1869. He is a young man of practical and progressive ideas, using the latest and most improved methods in the management of its broad acres. Industrious and persevering, he has met with success during his brief business career, and has a bright and promising future before him.

The great-grandfather of our subject, Thomas Parsons, Sr., was the first white child born in Moorefield, Hardy County, Va., now West Virginia, his birth occurring there about the year 1730. In the development of that state he assisted materially, and bore with courage all the privations and hardships incident to the life of a pioneer. Indians were at that time numerous and dangerous, and the settlers were in constant peril of their lives. At one time they pursued him seventy-five miles, and as he fled through the valleys he could see them hastening down the adjoining mountains. It was a perilous journey, but he finally reached shelter among friends. He was a soldier of the Revolutionary War. In 1782 he married Elsie Miles, a native of Hardy County, who died there January 19, 1824, aged sixty-six years. His death occurred November 1, 1804.

Of the family of Thomas Parsons, Sr., we note the following: Sarah, born April 20, 1783, married John Hanson in 1803, and afterward moved from Hardy County, Va., to Columbus, Ohio. Hannah, born September 27, 1784, died when a young lady. Mary, who was born September 20, 1786, became the wife of John Hinkle, of Franklin County, Mo., March 24, 1807; years afterwards she moved to Franklin County, Mo. Of her children only two sons survive, John Henry, of Clinton, Mo., and Parsons, who resides on the old homestead.

Next in order of birth among the children of Thomas Parsons, Sr., was Jane, born August 15, 1788, who married William Hinkle October 17, 1809, and afterward moved to Franklin County, Mo., where she and her husband died. Amelia, born February 21, 1790, was married to Ebenezer Welton March 6, 1814, and later moved to Vincennes, Ind. Of their five children only two are living, Mary and Albert. Prudence, born April 11, (?) 1792, married John Stumpe September 12, 1812, and moved to St. Charles County, Mo., but afterward went to St. Louis County, where she and her husband died. Elizabeth, born January 12, 1794, married Samuel Skidmore November (?) 6, 1818. David Miles, born October 12, 1795 (?), married Jemima Harness January 30, 1820. Thomas, Jr., who was born December 25, 1797, died December 22, 1852, age 54 years, 11 months and 28 days, married Phoebe, her birth being April 14, 1809, daughter of Jacob Ward, of Randolph County, Va., their union taking place November 14, 1827, and died January 2, 1860, age 50 years, 8 months and 18 days.

For several years after their marriage Thomas and Phoebe Parsons continued to live in Virginia, but in the fall of 1837 came west and settled in Franklin County, Mo., where they remained until the spring of 1841. They then moved to St. Charles County, Mo., and on the 14th of April, that year, settled on the Haines place, one of the oldest homesteads in the county. There they built up a comfortable abode and became the owners of several hundred acres of valuable land.

The father of our subject, William Ward Parsons, was born in Hardy County, Va., August 18, 1828, and when about sixteen years of age left Virginia, coming with his father to Missouri. On reaching this state he settled on a tract of land now owned by his son, our subject, and in the pursuit of the dual occupation of farmer and stockraiser he became well-to-do. November 14, 1864, he married Maria E., daughter of Levitas (?) and Sarah Livergood, of St. Louis County, Mo. His death occurred August 22, 1876, at which time he left two sons, but our subject is now the only survivor. His widow, who was born in St. Louis County, Mo., died February 8, 1888. Her aged mother, who is now seventy-six years old, after the death of her first husband, Mr. Livergood, became the wife of John Johnson; she is now living on the old homestead with our subject.

Of the brothers and sisters of our subjects father, we note the following: Elizabeth Janie, was born in Hardy County, Va., March 22, 1831, and is still living. Jacob, who was born in Hardy County, June 9, 1833, married Mary F. English, and at his death left two sons, one of whom died in early manhood, and the other, Walter P., is a resident of the state of Washington. Emeline, who was born in Hardy County February 17, 1835, married W. B. Smith, of Franklin County, Mo., March 22, 1869, and both are now deceased; they had four daughters, all of whom are married. George Scott was born in Hardy County, January 22, 1837, and died in St. Charles County, Mo., April 18, 1862. Virginia Ann was born in Hardy County December 28, 1838, and died in St. Charles County, Mo., Sept. 6, 1857. Thomas Miles, born in St. Charles County, July 20, 1842, married March 31, (?) 1870. she died January 18, 1873 (?), leaving a daughter, Nettie R. Addie A., who was born in St. Charles County, March 27, 1847, married Dr. A. M. VanDeventer, of Audrain County, where they resided several years. From there they moved to Higby, Randolph County, Mo., where she died March 7, 1887, leaving five daughters, Minnie A., Jennie D., Carlie H., Medora Addie and Lucy. Medora A., born in St. Charles County, Mo., October 2, 1849, married J. K. (?) P. Stephenson, of Pittsburg, Pa., November 7 (?), 1871. They are residents of St. Louis, and have four children, William P., Dallie E., Alma H. and Daisy Pauline. Mary V. A., born in St. Charles County, December 11, 1851, was married to Dr. S. R. Loving, of Virginia, in January 1877, in Franklin County, Mo. They are living in St. Louis County and have one child named Dovie Lee.

The boyhood of William Lee Parsons was passed in the usual manner of farmer lads, his time being divided between work and play, and attending the district schools. On completing his primary education he entered Mechanicsville Institute, where he remained for a term. When he arrived at suitable years and it became necessary for him to decide upon some occupation for his future life, he concluded to continue as a farmer and has been financially prosperous. He now owns six hundred or more acres of land, most of which is under good cultivation and yields abundant harvests in return for the labor bestowed upon it. This includes the original Thomas Parsons estate.

In religious belief Mr. Parsons is a Methodist, and is serving as Steward of the church. He is also one of the Trustees of Pleasant Hill Methodist church. Fraternally he holds membership with Mechanicsville Lodge No. 160, A. F. & A. M., also I. O. O. F. Lodge of Defiance and Riverside Lodge K. P., St. Charles, and Hiram Council of St. Louis. In his political faith he supports the Democratic cause, and is at all times opposed to monopolies and in favor of free trade. He was married to Mamie Jeffries, a descendant of Sir Joseph Williamson, Secretary of State to England, 1639.
